English Banana.com's

big grammar book

Introduction

Hello there . . . !

. . . and welcome to English Banana.com's big grammar book. It's the third fantastic book from English Banana and the aim this time is to practise grammar, grammar and, er, more grammar!

It's jam-packed from cover to cover with a great selection of photocopiable worksheets taken from the popular English Banana.com website. We wanted to provide teachers with a really useful book of no-nonsense grammar worksheets that they can dip into and use in class with students at Entry Level (ESOL Core Curriculum Entry Levels 1 & 2). It is also ideal for students to work with at home since the answers are all printed at the back.

The book is divided into four parts and is graded in difficulty, so that it begins with some basic stuff and builds up to more challenging grammar activities. It features a selection of Essential English worksheets which provide practice for crucial basic areas of knowledge for learners at Entry Level, like using numbers, writing the alphabet, spelling days and months correctly, and so on.

We hope that you find this book a big help and full of material that you can use with your learners. A big thank-you must go to all the students who have already been trialling these worksheets in class. Their feedback has been invaluable to the development of this book. We'd also love to know what you think! Send your comments, feedback, and questions about this book or English Banana.com in general to: info@englishbanana.com.

All the materials on the English Banana.com website are absolutely free, so for access to over 400 original worksheets, as well as fun online games and quizzes for practising English language skills, get your students learning with English Banana today at: www.englishbanana.com.

Wishing you every success,

All the team at English Banana.com

Part Four

- 79 & 81 My name is Tim. I live in Nottingham, which is a city in the UK. I live in a small detached house with my wife Jenny, and our two children, Lisa and James. I work at Debenhams in Nottingham, and I really enjoy my job. I am a sales manager for the sports clothing department. Debenhams is the largest department store in Nottingham and there are branches all over the UK.

When I'm not at work I like to play tennis with my friend Joe. He is much better than me, but I still enjoy it. At the weekends I sometimes take my family to Manchester to visit Jenny's mum. She lives at Pine View Nursing Home in a nice suburb of the city and has been there for about five years. She loves to see her grandchildren. James always tells her about what he is doing at school. James and Lisa both go to the same school, Mount Street Junior School.

- 80 & 82 Hello, I'm Jenny, Tim's wife. We have been married for almost eleven years. I met Tim when we were both at university. I studied Physics while Tim studied Business Management. We graduated from Cardiff University in 1989, and went to live in Birmingham. We got married in 1993 at Lincoln Cathedral. I took a one-year post-graduate teaching course, then got a job teaching Science at Lincoln High School.

We moved to Nottingham in 1996 where Lisa was born. I remember that she was a very fat baby, but a happy one! My mum helped us with looking after the baby in the first year, before she had to go into the nursing home in Manchester. She wanted to move to a home in Manchester because that is where my two older sisters and their families live. We go to visit often - when I can get Tim to drive us up there! I don't drive. I took some lessons when I was a student in Cardiff but I found driving on the roads quite frightening and gave up! Perhaps one day I will try again.

About two years after we had Lisa, James was born. He was born at St. Patrick's hospital in Nottingham. It seems like it was only last week. I can't believe he's already at school.

Introduction

Calling all Active English Learners . . . !

Welcome to English Banana.com's big activity book. This is the fourth compilation of worksheets and activities from the popular English Banana.com website. The aim this time is to engage learners from about Level 1 (Intermediate) upwards in active English lessons. This extensive new collection provides a varied and interesting set of resources for practising a range of English language skills, from grammar to reading, and vocabulary building to developing research skills.

It's divided into subject areas and there is a comprehensive answer section, which also gives notes for how to use the material. We have included two special sections towards the back of the book. The first is a collection of classroom games that have been tried and tested and really work. Some may be familiar while others are totally original. In publishing descriptions of these games and activities we are not in any way laying claim to having invented them. Our only aim is to disseminate ideas that work well at a range of levels and always seem to get a great response from learners.

The second special section is for reference and lists rhyming words, using the vowels and diphthongs from the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA). These pages provide support for learners as they come to identify spelling patterns and match together words with the sounds of English. However you use the book, we hope that you'll enjoy learning English and come to a deeper understanding and appreciation of this fabulous language – which can be so entirely frustrating at times and so difficult to learn!

If you enjoy this book why not get online and log onto our website for more original and fun activities for learning English. Best of all, everything on the website is absolutely free! So for access to free printable worksheets, as well as fun online games and quizzes, get your mouse moving in our direction today – click on www.englishbanana.com.

Finally, I must say a big thank you to all my learners who have been testing and trialling the material that appears in this book. It's been great working with all of you. Thanks for showing me what you liked and didn't like.

Hope you really enjoy this book.

The Funny Noise – Irregular Verbs in the Past Simple Tense

a) Read the letter below from Alan to his friend Ethel. All the irregular verbs have the wrong ending – a regular '-ed' ending! Underline each one.

b) Write the letter again, using the correct past simple form of each irregular verb.

Dear Ethel

I'm writing to tell you about something that happened yesterday. I getted up at the usual time - about 10am - haved a shower and maked breakfast. I eated a big bowl of cereal and some toast and watched TV for a while. Then I goed into the kitchen where I heard a funny noise. I thinked it comed from behind the cooker. I getted my tool box and moved the cooker out of the way.

The noise getted louder but I couldn't see anything. I ringed my uncle to ask his advice. He sayed that he thinked it could be a gas leak. When I hearded this I just panicked! I putted the phone down, runned outside, getted in my car and drived to the local police station. I telled them about my gas leak but the constable losed his patience with me. He sayed that I should have phoned the gas company. He writed his report, then ringed the gas company for me.

Then I remembered that my house doesn't have gas - only electricity! I feeled really stupid and knowed that the constable would be angry with me for wasting his time, so I runned out of the police station while he ised still on the phone. I goed home to try to find out what the noise ised. On the way I buyed a newspaper and I readed about an escaped llama that breaked out of the city safari park last Wednesday.

When I getted home I putted my key in the door, turned it, goed inside and straight away hearded that funny noise again. I holded my breath and opened the door slowly. Guess what? I finded the llama hiding in my cupboard! I letted him stay and he sleeped in my garden last night. The snoring ised so loud! This morning I taked him back to the safari park. They areed really pleased to see him again and gived me a reward of £50!

Hope you are well. Write soon and let me know how you are. Your friend,

Alan

A Letter to Aunt Monica

See if you can find all the spelling and punctuation mistakes in Sandy's letter:

25th september 2004

cardiff, uK

Dear aunt Monica

Thank you very much fo your letter. It was greet to get a letter from you. I am really enjoying University life. i have made some good fiends allready – expecially helen and marcus. Helen is form Manchester and Marcus comes from liverpool. His accent is reelly wierd.

yesterday we went to Cardiff to do som shopping. Everything is much more expensive than back at home. – i miss Jamaica and of corse I miss You and my naughty little bruthers. Cardiff is a Big city – the capitul city of Wales. Wales is nex to Englund and a seperate country, but they are both part of the UK. It's confusing, isn,t it?

My course Is verry interesting.. i am leaning so much about the enviroment of this country. my Teachers are Good, accept I wish they would speak more slowly som of th time.,, I can't always here everythng that they are saying. That's Why I'm using a small tape recorder to record every lecture8. Then I can listen to it in my Room as I stuidy. It's really helps.

Thank s for asking abot all my boyfriends !! No, – I haven,t met anone yet. I'm here to learn about the enviroment and practise my english, rathur than go out drinking in pubs and clubs with boys every night! I hope that i will fiind someone who shars my interests. Untill that time ; you will have to make do with me being a singl girl!

With Lots of Love to you and my Darling bruthers Roger an Paul, and all my family and frends there. I will see You very soon. Hope I will hear from you soon Too.'

Your loving Niece,

Reading Comprehension 2 – The Car Thief

Samantha was walking home from work one day last month, when she saw a man who was trying to break into a car. She asked him what he was doing and he told her to, "Get lost!" She ran to a nearby shop and asked the owner to call the police, which he did immediately. When she went outside again she saw that both the thief and the car had gone. About ten minutes later, a police car stopped outside the shop. A policewoman got out and asked Samantha some questions about the incident. She asked her to give a description of the car and the thief. Samantha said that the car was a dark blue Ford Focus with the registration number TR03 RMN8. She said that it had a large scratch on the right hand side. She described the man as tall with short dark hair. She said that he was slim, looked about twenty-five years old and was wearing a blue denim jacket and black jeans. The policewoman wrote down everything in a notebook. Samantha felt a little shaken but was glad to be able to help. A few days later she found out that the thief had been caught in Newcastle and that the car had been returned to its owner, undamaged.

Questions:

1. Who is the paragraph about? _____

Anna:

"I'm planning my holiday for next summer and I don't know whether I should have a lazy holiday or an exciting one. Last year I went on holiday to southern Spain with my best friends, Joanna and Ling. We stayed in a brilliant four-star hotel, which had three swimming pools. It was quite expensive but we really enjoyed ourselves and we all got great suntans! This year, Joanna is going away with her parents to Greece so it'll be just Ling and me. Ling wants us to go on an adventure holiday in Africa, the type where you have to go walking in the desert and sleep out in the open. She said it would be interesting and better than having a lazy holiday because we would learn about the world around us and see some wild animals. I'm not sure whether I want to go to Africa. For me, a holiday means relaxing on a beach, not trekking across the middle of nowhere. Ling said that we'd see elephants and zebras and have some amazing experiences. I think she's bored of lying in the sun all day and fancies a change. I've got to make up my mind by next Monday at the latest so that she can book the tickets. It would cost £1,400 each to go to Africa, but less than half that amount for two weeks in Portugal."

Questions:

1. When is Anna going on holiday?
2. Name her two closest friends.
3. True or false – last year she went to northern Spain?
4. How many swimming pools did their hotel have?
5. Was the hotel expensive?
6. True or false – only Anna got a good suntan?
7. Where is Joanna going on holiday this year?
8. Who is she going with?
9. What type of holiday does Ling want this year?
10. Where does she want to go?
11. Does Anna want to go with her?
12. Why does Ling want to go on this type of holiday?
13. What does Anna enjoy doing on holiday?
14. What animals does Ling hope to see?
15. What sort of experiences does she expect to have?
16. When does Anna have to let Ling know about the holiday?
17. How much would it cost each of them to go to Africa?
18. Would it be cheaper to go to Africa or Portugal?
19. Do you think Anna should go to Africa with Ling? Why?/Why not?
20. Do you think Anna will go to Africa with Ling? Why?/Why not?

Reading Comprehension 4 – What Shall We Do Tomorrow?

Serena and George are on holiday in Devon, UK. Serena says to George:

Serena:

“I think tomorrow we can have a lie in until about 8.30, then have a shower, then have breakfast. If you don’t mind, I’ll have cereal and you can have a fry-up, but you’ll have to cook it, as I can’t stand cooking meat. After that, you can wash up, while I have a walk down to the village to get the papers. I’ll get a Telegraph for me and a Mirror for you, as I know you like doing the crossword. When I get back I thought we could play tennis for a couple of hours. Then you can drive me to the coast, where we can find a nice restaurant to have lunch. I’ll probably order a large salad and you can have a fresh seafood dish, if you like. After lunch I’ll want to relax for a while and be alone, so you’ll have to go out on your own somewhere. You should either explore the town, or go to the beach for a couple of hours. We’ll meet up again at about 5 o’clock for dinner. Then I’ll want you to take me out for a drink, or we could always go to the theatre. I think they’ve got a comedy on at the moment. After our evening out I’ll be pretty tired so I’ll probably just go straight to bed. I’m looking forward to a lovely day tomorrow, George, dear. Does everything sound alright to you?”

Questions:

1. Who is speaking?
2. Where are they having their holiday?
3. What time will they get up?
4. What does Serena want for breakfast?
5. What can George have for breakfast?
6. Who will make George’s breakfast?
7. What will George do while Serena is getting the papers?
8. What paper will Serena get for herself?
9. Why will she get the Mirror for George?
10. How long will they play tennis for?
11. Where is Serena planning to have lunch?
12. What can George have for lunch?
13. What does Serena want to do after lunch?
14. What does she suggest that George can do?
15. What time will they meet up for dinner?
16. What does Serena want to do after dinner?
17. What type of play is on at the theatre?
18. What is Serena planning to do after that?
19. Do you think George will agree to all of Serena’s plans? Why?/Why not?
20. Do you think they will both enjoy the day? Why?/Why not?

Reading Comprehension 5 – Looking for a Job

It's 7.30pm. Emma phones a recruitment agency and leaves the following message on their answerphone:

Emma:

"Hello. I wonder if you can help me. My name is Emma Heath. I'm looking for a job as an administrator. At the moment I'm working at a solicitor's as a clerk. Do you know Blame, Payne and Co.? I've been working there for about two years but there doesn't seem to be any chance of promotion, so I'm trying to find something else. The other thing is, I'm moving soon, so I'm looking for a job in Leicester. I would prefer it if it was in the city centre really. My current address is 23 Terraced Walk, Derby, DE23 3GP, but I'm going to be moving out on the 30th, and then I'll be living with my mum until I've found a house to rent in Leicester. After the 30th you'll be able to contact me at my mum's. Her address is 8 Cedars Lane, Swinscote, Derby, DE40 9UR. By the way, my mobile number is 079421 645784. If you do ring me on my mobile, please can you ring after six because I'll be at work all day and my boss doesn't know that I'm planning on leaving. My current salary is 11K per annum and I would like to find something for at least thirteen or more. I'll bring my CV in to your office once I've finished updating it. Oh yes, last month I went on a four-day intensive first aid course, which makes me fully qualified to give first aid."

Questions:

1. Who is the paragraph about?
2. Why does she leave the message?
3. What job does she do at the moment?
4. What job would she like to do?
5. Name the company that she works for.
6. How long has she been working there?
7. Why does she want to leave?
8. Which city is she moving to?
9. What is her address at the moment?
10. Is she planning to buy a house in Leicester?
11. What is her mum's address?
12. When can she be contacted there?
13. Add together the first four digits of her phone number.
14. When can she be contacted on her mobile number?
15. How much would she like her salary to increase by?
16. What is a CV?
17. What do the letters CV stand for?
18. Is Emma's boss upset that she will be leaving?
19. In your opinion, is Emma right to look for another job? Why?/Why not?
20. Do you think she will be happier living in Leicester? Why?/Why not?

Reading Comprehension 8 – Checking Train Times

Sian phones her friend Khalid and leaves a message on his answerphone:

“Hi, Khalid. I’ve just checked the train times for Tuesday next week and I’ve found a train from Derby to Edinburgh that takes about four and a half hours. Well, four hours and twenty-three minutes to be precise. It leaves Derby at 9.16 in the morning and gets into Edinburgh at 13.39. You have to change once, at Newcastle. It gets into Newcastle at 11.52 and leaves at 12.01. The train to Newcastle is run by Virgin Trains and the train you get from Newcastle to Edinburgh is run by GNER. There is a faster service but it leaves Derby later in the morning – at 10.14 – and you have to change at Darlington. It gets into Darlington Station at 12.14 and then you’ve got a seven-minute wait before your next train leaves. It gets into Edinburgh at 14.21. If you get the first train I can meet you at two o’clock. My sister and her friend never finish work until half past two so they can only come with me to meet you if you get a later train. Let me know which train you’re coming on. If you want to come later just let me know. I’ll be in tonight until half eight-ish, then I’m going out with Michelle. Or you could give me a ring tomorrow night. I’ll be at my mum’s, on 0131 600 46220. I’m going there after work, so ring me any time after about quarter past six and you should catch me there. Oh yes, the number to find out train times is, er, 08457 484950. You could always give them a ring yourself and find out about a different time.”

Questions:

1. Who is speaking?
2. Who does she leave a message for?
3. Where is her friend travelling from and going to?
4. How long exactly does the first journey from Derby to Edinburgh take?
5. How long exactly does the second journey from Derby to Edinburgh take?
6. How many changes are there during the first journey?
7. How long does it take the first train to get from Derby to Newcastle?
8. Where do you have to change during the second journey?
9. How long does it take the second train to get from Darlington to Edinburgh?
10. Which of the two trains taken during the first journey is run by Virgin Trains?
11. Write in words the time that the second train gets into Edinburgh.
12. What is the name of the other train company mentioned?
13. Do you know of a faster way to get from Derby to Edinburgh?
14. What time does the caller’s sister finish work on Tuesdays?
15. If her friend gets the second train, how many people will meet him at the station?
16. What time is the caller going out tonight?
17. Who is she going out with?
18. When is the caller’s friend hoping to travel?
19. When will the caller next be at her mum’s?

Reading Comprehension 9 – First Day in Class

Carolina is telling Lizzie about the first lesson of her new English class:

“Well, I was nervous before it started. There were eight of us altogether, including the teacher. My teacher’s name is Charlotte. She’s only been working there for two months. She used to teach in Spain. The first thing we did was stand in a circle and we had to try to learn everybody’s name, age and where they come from. I don’t know if I can remember all of them, but I’ll try. There was someone called Alexandre. He’s from Portugal too and he’s 23. No, he was 24. There was Mohammad, from Kirkuk in Iraq. He’s 30 – two years older than me. There were two other women – H  l  ne and Yui-Gui. H  l  ne’s 38 and comes from France. She was a bit loud and I didn’t talk to her much. Yui-Gui was really nice. We worked together – she was my partner for some of the lesson. She’s from China and used to live in Beijing before she moved to England. She’s 41 years old and married with two children. Patrick came half an hour late. He’s 57 and comes from Eritrea in Africa. Charlotte said that he’s got to come on time if he wants to stay in the class. The other student was Kamal. He was very quiet and didn’t want to tell anyone his age, but I asked him at break-time; he told me that he’s 29. He’s from Afghanistan.”

Reading Comprehension 10 – What's the Right Time?

Graham is telling his friend Marco about what happened yesterday:

"I woke up yesterday morning and looked at my alarm clock. It said 2.15pm! I couldn't believe it. I thought I was late for work, so I jumped out of bed and ran into the bathroom. The clock on the wall in there was two and a half hours ahead of the one in the bedroom. It was very confusing! I had a shower then went downstairs. The clock in the hall was an hour behind the one in the bathroom. When I went into the kitchen I looked at the clock on the microwave, which was three and a quarter hours ahead of the one in my bedroom. I found out later that day that my flatmate, Gordon, had changed all the clocks in my house for a joke. He thought it was very funny. In the living room the clock on the video said it was 3.30am, while in the guest bedroom the clock on the wall next to the window was two hours and twenty-five minutes slower than that. I went into the study and picked up my watch. It was eight hours ahead of the one in the kitchen. I was due at work at 8.30am and didn't want to be late. I went outside into the garden and looked in at the window of my shed. The clock on the wall in there was three hours behind my alarm clock. There was a postman walking past, but he didn't know the time. He said that when he left the sorting office an hour or two ago he thought it was about six o'clock. In the end I phoned my brother Alan in Toronto, Canada, and he was really annoyed because I'd woken him up, along with his whole family. He said it was 2.44 in the morning their time. I had forgotten that in Toronto they're five hours behind us. That's how I finally found out what time it was!"

What time was it... (use either 'am' or 'pm')

1. ...in the study? _____
2. ...in the living room? _____
3. ...in the guest bedroom? _____
4. ...in the hall? _____
5. ...in Toronto, Canada? _____
6. ...in the shed? _____
7. ...in the bedroom? _____
8. ...in the kitchen? _____
9. ...in the bathroom? _____
10. ...at the end of the story? (the right time!) _____

More questions...

11. What is Graham's friend called? _____
12. What time did Graham have to be at work? _____
13. Who changed the clocks in Graham's house? _____
14. Where does Graham's brother live? _____

A Fair Price?

A. Look at the shopping items below. In your opinion, what is a fair price for each one, and how much is the maximum that you would be willing to pay for each? Give feedback to the whole class.

Fair Price (£/p or $/c): Max. Price (£/p or $/c):

A litre of milk –

A loaf of bread –

A kilo of beef –

A dozen (12) eggs –

A large bunch of flowers –

A newspaper –

6 apples –

A medium-sized box of chocolates –

12 bags of crisps –

A 2 litre bottle of diet cola –

A litre of petrol –

B. In groups of 4 or 5 learners, imagine that you are setting up a shop that will sell all of the above items (you could add some of your own to the list too). As a group, agree on a fair price for each one. Give feedback to the whole class.

C. Decide on some special offers that will persuade customers to come into your shop rather than going to a competitor's. For example, BOGOF, 3 for 2, Half Price, and so on. How many special offers should you have and how long should they last for? How will they affect overall sales? Give feedback to the whole class.

D. In your group, visit a real shop or supermarket and compare their prices and offers with the ones you have agreed on. Do you need to rethink your plans in the light of this? Give feedback to the whole class.

Games for the Classroom

Speaking & Listening Skills

I-Spy

Students can lead this very simple game where they think of something that they can see in the classroom (or wherever you are) and the others have to guess what it is. Students give a clue by saying the first letter, for example, if they are thinking about the clock on the wall, they would say, 'I spy with my little eye, something beginning with C.' A quick game that gets the students thinking about the vocab relating to their immediate environment.

Class Secrets

Get the group together and ask for a volunteer to leave the room. Once they've gone, think of a 'secret' about that person, for example, it's their birthday, or they're having an affair with the college principal. That kind of thing. When they come back in, they have to guess the secret truth about themselves by asking questions. The rest of the group give clues. A great ice-breaker, this one always raises a laugh.

Simon Says

A party game that works well with English students as a way of practising listening to and understanding commands. The teacher says a number of simple commands, such as, 'Put your hands on your head', 'Stand on one leg' or 'Start humming', and the students have to do what you say – but only if you have prefaced the command with 'Simon says...'. If you don't say 'Simon says...' and the student follows the command, they are out, and the game resumes until there is a winner.

Party Invitations

The whole class sits in a circle. Tell them that it's your birthday next week and that you're planning a birthday party. They are all invited... but on one condition. They must bring you a present, and it must be something that you really want. Each student in turn tells you what they will bring to give you on your birthday. You will either tell them that they can come, or that they are not invited. This depends on what they offer to bring you. The item they're going to bring must begin with the same letter as your first name. If it does, they can come; if it doesn't, they can't. For example, if your name is Lucy and they offer to bring 'a lemon' as a present, they will be welcome. If they offer to bring 'a bottle of wine' they will be given short shrift! This game is hilarious, as some students will twig onto your 'unspoken rule' fairly early on, while some won't get it at all, however obvious you make it!

Something's Different

Get the whole class together. Ask one of them to leave the room, then get the remaining students to change five things about the classroom. For example, you could put a chair on a table, or get two students to swap jumpers, or anything – so long as it's not too subtle. Then bring the student back in and get them to guess what changes you have made.

Whispering Trees

Get the students standing in a line. Stand at one end and whisper a short phrase or sentence

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

Games for the Classroom

in the ear of the student next to you. For example, you could say, 'My dad once met Bernard Cribbins in a bus queue in Dover.' Each student repeats the phrase to their neighbour until you get to the end of the line, when the last student tells the class the sentence they heard, and you can reveal what the original sentence was. A good game for practising listening and speaking skills.

What's Going On...?

Probably better for an intermediate or advanced class, this one. Prepare twenty questions, based on what is happening in the news (be it local, national or world news). You could include spelling questions too, and questions about different members of the class, for example, 'Which country does Louisa come from?' Split the class into two teams and you're ready to play. Give five points for a correct answer, and bonus points at your discretion for any extra information that the students give in their answers. If the first team doesn't know the answer, hand it over to the other team for a bonus point.

My Butler Went To Meadowhall

The title refers to Meadowhall shopping centre near Sheffield. The game is really just a version of My Grandmother Went To Market. Students sit in a circle, away from desks and paper, and so on. Tell the students that you teach because you love it and don't need the money as you are actually rather well off. In fact, you have a butler who goes up to Meadowhall every Friday to go shopping for you, and he buys you lots of different things. This week, however, you can't decide what to buy, so you are asking the students to help you. You are going to make a list. Start with saying, 'My butler is going to Meadowhall on Friday and will buy me... (think of any item that you can buy in a shop).' The next person has to say, 'Your butler is going to Meadowhall on Friday and will buy you...' whatever you said, plus an item of their own. The list goes around the circle until the last person has to remember the whole list of items. Students usually give prompts if their fellow students are struggling. A good vocabulary game, as well as being fun and a test of the memory. Plus they get a laugh thinking about your (imaginary – unless you really have one...?) butler.

What's In The Bag...?

Have a 'lucky dip' style bag, or box, which you can use from time to time for this quick activity that draws the class together in mutual curiosity. Put something different in the bag (or box) each time, for example, a paper clip, or an orange. Students take it in turns to feel inside the bag (or box) – without looking – and then describe what the object feels like and what they think it is. This activity can easily be handed over to the students for them to facilitate among themselves, even using items that they have brought in from home.

The Yes/No Game

An old favourite from TV, this is great for practising question and answer forms. Get students up to the front of the class one at a time and ask them questions, about themselves, the weather, the school or college – anything. The student must reply verbally but cannot say the words 'Yes' or 'No'. If they do, they are out. Ask someone to act as the timer (and as the 'gong' or 'buzzer' when each player slips up and is out), and write the times for how long each student managed to go without saying 'Yes' or 'No' on the board. If the students get the hang of this game they could play it in pairs, with one asking the questions and the other answering, before swapping over roles.

Audio Pictures

Get the students into pairs, then give one half of the pair a picture from a magazine, for example, a man wearing a hat and coat and playing the piano. They have to describe what they can see, in detail, without showing the picture to their partner, who draws a sketch based on the description. At the end of the description they compare their pictures, before swapping roles. At the end of the session the whole class can see how close all the drawings were to their originals. A good activity for practising communication and listening skills, and giving descriptions.

Our Living Photo Album

Ask each student to bring in one or more photographs of something that is important to them, that you can keep to put into a class photo album. Give them time to prepare a two-minute talk about their photograph, which could be, for example, of a place, or a family member or an event that has touched their life. Then sit in a circle with all the students and your 'living photo album' will come to life, as each student in turn explains why their photo is important or memorable to them. You could make a display with the pictures, or literally fill an album with them that everyone can enjoy looking at. Explain that you will give the photos back at the end of the course (or even at the end of the week). This is a good activity to help a relatively new group get to know each other.

Reading and Writing Skills

Ace Anagrams

Students at all levels enjoy puzzling over this game. It's also a good way to get them looking in their dictionaries. Your students suggest nine letters at random, either vowel or consonant, which you write on the board. (Or you could have cards with them on if you're really organised!) In small groups the students have five minutes to come up with as many (real) words as they can from the original nine letters. The team with the most words spelt correctly gets a point, and the next round begins.

Hangman

Another good letters-based game. It's good because students can get up and lead this one just as well as the teacher. It's also good because it's quick and can pull students together for a quick bit of group work just before going home. Think of a word or phrase and draw a number of dashes on the board that corresponds to the number of letters. The other students suggest one letter at a time. If they are correct you have to fill in the letter on the board in its correct place. If they are incorrect you draw part of the hangman shape. Students can take a guess if they know the word. The person who guesses correctly steps up to the board to think of a word for the next session.

What Time Is It On...?

A good one for testing telling the time, and as a general reading comprehension using realia. Select a page from the Radio Times, or any English language TV guide and photocopy it so that each student can have a copy. Split the group into two teams and ask them questions based on the programme information given in the TV guide. For example, you could ask,

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

Games for the Classroom

“What time is ‘The A-Team’ on?”, and “What time does ‘The A-Team’ finish?”, before moving on to more complex reading comprehension questions such as, “What is the name of the actor who plays ‘Mr.T’ in ‘The A-Team’?” Get the students to nominate a ‘runner’ from their team who runs and writes the answers on the board. You can even get them drawing clock faces as an answer, or writing the answer using the twenty four hour clock. Note: questions need not be ‘A-Team’-based!

Board Game Boffins

As a project, get the students working in pairs or small groups to design a new board game. They have to form a games ‘company’, and then plan the concept and design of their game. After that they have to actually make a working prototype, which they test out, and which is then tested along with all the other ideas in a games tournament. Each company has to explain the reasons behind the design choices that they made in constructing their game. The students then all vote for their favourite games in categories such as: ‘Most playable game’, ‘Game most likely to make a $million’, ‘Best design and construction’, and so on. You could use the board game template on page 73 as a starting point.

Ten Things

Get your students to leave the building and go out in small groups or pairs with the task of writing down ‘Ten things you can see at...’ various places near to your school or college. For example, they could write down ten things you can see at... the leisure centre, the shopping centre, the sports stadium, the post office, the doctor’s, the bus station, the railway station, the market, the funfair, and so on. Ask them to make sure that their spellings are correct before coming back to you with their list(s). Of course you could always make it ‘Fifty things you can see at...’ if your group are particularly gifted – or if you just want to get rid of them for the whole morning...! When they come back, discuss together what each group has found.

What Shops Sell What...?

This is a similar exercise to ‘Ten Things’, in that the students leave the classroom in pairs or small groups and go around town for a couple of hours. They have to write down the proper names of as many shops as they can, along with a brief description of what you can buy at that shop. For example, ‘Marks and Spencer – clothes and food’, ‘Debenhams – clothes, gifts, and perfume’, until they have a list of around twenty shops. When the students get back they could write sentences about the shops, for example, ‘At Marks and Spencer you can buy clothes and food.’ It motivates students to go into and look around shops that they may walk past every day but have never visited. You could always set the list of shops for your students to visit, ensuring a variety of types. Of course, it gives an opportunity to practise shopping vocab wherever you happen to be teaching.

Vocabulary Building

Name And Explain

This is a good game for practising spelling classroom words and getting students to talk about their immediate environment. Split the class into two groups and give each group a pack of sticky labels. Their task is to write labels and stick them on twenty different things in the classroom. Spellings must be correct, and at the end of the game students must give you a tour of their labelled items, explaining what each object is.

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

Games for the Classroom

What Is It...?

Get the class into two teams. Take one student from each class out of the room, give them both a whiteboard pen (or chalk stick, or marker, etc.) and give them the name of a book, TV show (for example 'The A-Team'), film, or famous person. They have to run back into the room and draw clues on the board, while the other students try to guess the name that they have been given. They are not allowed to write any words. Students love this game, and it gets rather loud as the students get more involved. Make sure your students are aware of the cultural references that you want to give them. The game can be played just as well using vocab sets such as, furniture, food, animals, and so on.

What Am I...?

For this game you will need to put a sticker on the back of each student, with a noun written on it, for example, apple, chair, Wednesday, bathroom, or bottle of tomato ketchup. The students have to mingle with one another and ask questions to find out 'What am I...?' Students can only reply with either 'Yes' or 'No'. Once they have found out what they are, they report to you and tell you what they are and what questions they had to ask in order to work it out. They could then go and write down the different questions. This also works when you use celebrity names instead of nouns – as long as all the students are aware of exactly who all the celebrities are. You could also use specific vocab sets such as countries ('Am I north of the equator, or south?'), or clothes ('Am I worn on the head?') The sky's the limit! Good for question forms and to get students talking.

Grammar Skills

A Capital Game

Write a load of nouns on the board, both common nouns and proper nouns, but don't use capital letters. Vary the list of words to suit the level of your group, so for an elementary class you could write something like: 'table, usa, book, house, garden, england, philip, the times, shirt, ice cream...' and so on. The students split into two groups and compete to be the first to write the list of words again, but this time putting capital letters on the proper nouns (in this example, 'USA, England, Philip, The Times').

Interesting Articles

Similar to 'A Capital Game', this involves writing plenty of different nouns on the board and getting the class – in two teams – to discuss and write down whether there should be 'a' or 'an' before each word. This is a quick and easy game – intended for elementary students really – that allows the students to identify and practise the grammar rule for indefinite articles. Make sure you throw a few proper nouns into the mix too, just to confuse them!

The Instant Story Generator

The whole group sits in a circle and decides on a few story keywords, for example, a place, a man's name, a woman's name, an object, and so on. Tell the students they are going to tell a story as a group. Each student can only contribute one word at a time, before the story

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

Games for the Classroom

moves on to the next person. If the story reaches a natural break the student whose turn it is next can say 'full stop' instead of carrying on. The story must include all the keywords that were agreed at the beginning. This is a great game for identifying sentence structure and bringing out grammar points, as well as letting the imagination run riot. A variation is to let each student contribute one sentence instead of just one word.

Action Games

Balloon Rodins

Split the class into small groups and give each one a large quantity of balloons and a roll of sticky tape. Their task is to create a fantastic balloon sculpture, which outshines those made by the other teams. After forty-five minutes or so the groups come together and look at all the sculptures. Each team has to describe what their sculpture represents – and is invited to elaborate on the principles of art that they have been influenced by... or not, as the case may be! Prepare yourselves for some 'explosive' balloon fun in this hilarious team-building and communicative activity! Note: this activity works just as well with modelling clay, or lots of old newspapers, instead of balloons.

Dead Heat

The class needs to be in groups of around eight people. Lay out a finish line at one end of the classroom with no desks or chairs in the way. The students stand in a line, as if about to start a race. On your signal they either run or walk towards the finishing line. However, all the students must cross the line at exactly the same time. A fun and energetic warmer which encourages students to talk to each other – particularly when they keep getting it wrong. Give your teams several attempts at this and they should get it in the end.

Get A Move On

Split the class into two teams. Set a starting line and a finishing line. This is basically a slow-walking race, where both teams are competing to be the last to cross the finishing line. The only proviso is that everyone in the race must keep moving forward – just very slowly. It's also good fun played with individuals in heats, building up to quarter-finals, semi-finals and a grand final. A fun team-building activity that will bring out the team spirit in your group.

8 Dear Ethel

I'm writing to tell you about something that happened yesterday. I got up at the usual time – about 10am – had a shower and made breakfast. I ate a big bowl of cereal and some toast and watched TV for a while. Then I went into the kitchen where I heard a funny noise. I thought it came from behind the cooker. I got my tool box and moved the cooker out of the way.

The noise got louder but I couldn't see anything. I rang my uncle to ask his advice. He said that he thought it could be a gas leak. When I heard this I just panicked! I put the phone down, ran outside, got in my car and drove to the local police station. I told them about my gas leak but the constable lost his patience with me. He said that I should have phoned the gas company. He wrote his report, then rang the gas company for me.

Answers to Worksheets and Notes for Use

Then I remembered that my house doesn't have gas – only electricity! I felt really stupid and knew that the constable would be angry with me for wasting his time, so I ran out of the police station while he was still on the phone. I went home to try to find out what the noise was. On the way I bought a newspaper and I read about an escaped llama that broke out of the city safari park last Wednesday.

When I got home I put my key in the door, turned it, went inside and straight away heard that funny noise again. I held my breath and opened the door slowly. Guess what? I found the llama hiding in my cupboard! I let him stay and he slept in my garden last night. The snoring was so loud! This morning I took him back to the safari park. They were really pleased to see him again and gave me a reward of £50!

Hope you are well. Write soon and let me know how you are. Your friend, Alan Walk past the main entrance to the park and turn right into Bromley Avenue. The bank is about 100 metres down Bromley Avenue. It's opposite the post office. It's not far from here – probably about 15 minutes if you walk quickly. You'd better hurry as I think it closes at five o'clock."

- 41 "I left school nearly fifteen years ago. My favourite subjects were English, French and History. I enjoyed French because it was interesting learning to speak a different language and I had a good teacher. I didn't like Science or Maths because they were a bit harder and I didn't like the teachers much. I'll never forget when our class went on a trip to France. We stayed in Paris for four nights. It was the first time I'd been abroad. My friends and I had so much fun!"

Dear Aunt Monica

Thank you very much for your letter. It was great to get a letter from you. I am really enjoying university life. I have made some good friends already – especially Helen and Marcus. Helen is from Manchester and Marcus comes from Liverpool. His accent is really weird.

Yesterday we went to Cardiff to do some shopping. Everything is much more expensive than back at home. I miss Jamaica and of course I miss you and my naughty little brothers. Cardiff is a big city – the capital city of Wales. Wales is next to England and a separate country, but they are both part of the UK. It's confusing, isn't it?

My course is very interesting. I am learning so much about the environment of this country. My teachers are good, except I wish they would speak more slowly some of the time. I can't always hear everything that they are saying. That's why I'm using a small tape recorder to record every lecture. Then I can listen to it in my room as I study. It really helps.

Thanks for asking about all my boyfriends! No, I haven't met anyone yet. I'm here to learn about the environment and practise my English, rather than go out drinking in pubs and clubs with boys every night! I hope that I will find someone who shares my interests. Until that time you will have to make do with me being a single girl!

With lots of love to you and my darling brothers Roger and Paul, and all my family and friends there. I will see you very soon. Hope I will hear from you soon too.

Your loving niece

- 63 This template can be used in various ways to create many different class surveys. One method is for students to write down a question such as, 'Which foods do you like?' They then write up to eight different options in separate boxes along the top row, for example: 'pasta, fish and chips, curry, lamb, chocolate biscuits, fruit, jacket potatoes, ice cream'. They interview different members of the class, writing the name of each person they ask in a separate box in the left-hand column. Students put a tick or a cross in the box to indicate whether their interviewee likes (tick) or dislikes (cross) each option.

- 72 This is a blank template which learners can use to make their own wordsearches. Method: write twenty words that are related in some way, for example, languages, colours or film stars. Make sure that all of the spellings are correct. Then, write the words in the grid, with one letter in each space. Words can go horizontally, vertically, diagonally, right way up, or wrong way up – it doesn't matter. When all the words are in the grid, fill in the remaining squares with random letters of the alphabet, to 'hide' the words that you have added. Tip: make your wordsearch more difficult by adding 'red herrings'. For example, if one of your words is 'YELLOW', you could add 'YELL' or 'YELLO' as you fill up the remaining spaces.

- 85 Bingo is a popular game in the UK, played by thousands of people every week, often for large cash prizes. I'm not suggesting you start giving away millions in class, but students always have a lot of fun competing for more modest prizes, such as chocolate bars and so on! Method: copy the worksheets and cut up the bingo cards. Give one to each student and ask them to write down a random selection of fifteen numbers between 1-90 – one in each of the blank spaces. You could play bingo by either using a machine or computer software program that can generate numbers randomly, or you could think of a random set of numbers yourself. If you do the latter, make sure you write down the numbers that you have read out, so that you can check the winning student's bingo card for accuracy. Give prizes for the first student to complete any line, then the first student to complete their game board. If the same person wins both times, keep playing and award the remaining prize to whoever finishes next.

Introduction

Hello again from English Banana.com!

Welcome to our latest book of worksheets for English lessons. This is the fifth book we've produced and we hope it's the best one yet! It's packed from cover to cover with worksheets that will really inspire learners, covering a huge variety of language areas. It's aimed at learners who are studying at about Level 1 and can be used with all types of English classes, as well as for home study, since the answers to all of the activities, plus notes for using the worksheets, are included at the back of the book.

The book is similar to our last book – the big activity book – in that it's divided into sections according to type of language skills being practised, namely grammar, vocabulary, spelling, reading, speaking & listening, and research skills. There are some activities that continue on from worksheets in the last book, for example more worksheets on abstract nouns and common idioms, more material on adjectives and synonyms, and more advanced spelling challenges, as well as two brand new reading comprehension tests.

We've included lots of exclusive material that has been written especially for this book and hasn't been available anywhere else before, including worksheets on 'its or it's', adverbs, syllables, understanding maps, and Calculator Code Words. We hope that there's loads of stuff here for learners of English to get their teeth into – wherever you may be studying! Judging from the many emails we receive, you're finding our materials helpful in lots of different learning environments, including schools, colleges, prisons, and home schooling groups. The worksheets are designed to be flexible, so feel free to adapt them to suit your needs, whether you're teaching Basic Skills Literacy, ESOL, EFL, ESL, EAL, TESL, TEFL, TESOL, or even just simply English! It's all about helping learners to improve their English skills – reading, writing, speaking and listening – and that's what the aim of English Banana.com has always been. Why not let us know what you think of our stuff?

We hope you will really enjoy using this book with your learners or as a self-study tool. Thanks once again to all my present and past learners who have helped in trialling these worksheets. Particular favourites that they liked were the 'Using Numbers – At the Chinese Restaurant' activity on pages 71-72, the Calculator Code Words on pages 65-67, and the Amazing Maze Game on page 81. Why not let us know what you liked, and what kind of worksheets you'd like us to publish next?

P.S. Get online at www.englishbanana.com for an ever-growing array of absolutely free resources – quizzes, games, worksheets, tests, clip-art photos, e-cards, drama scripts, links, polls, etc, etc. The list goes on and on!

15 Common Grammar Mistakes in Written and Oral Work

1. The verb doesn't agree with the subject:

- a) There are many person in this class.
- b) The film finish at four o'clock.

Advice: The verb should agree with the subject:

- a) There are many people in this class.
- b) The film finishes at four o'clock.

2. There are mixed tenses or the wrong tense has been used:

- a) I went to the supermarket and meet my friend James.
- b) I have saw my sister yesterday.

Advice: Use the correct tense, and don't mix tenses:

- a) I went to the supermarket and met my friend James.
- b) I saw my sister yesterday.

3. There are articles or determiners in the wrong place or missing altogether:

- a) I bought new computer last weekend.
- b) I had some interesting journey to work this morning.

Advice: Use articles and determiners correctly:

- a) I bought a new computer last weekend.
- b) I had an interesting journey to work this morning.

4. Capital letters are used incorrectly:

- a) I'll see you on sunday.
- b) my friend rob lives at 44 sunnybank drive, ollerton, southampton, sh2 5pb.

Advice: Put a capital letter at the start of a proper noun and where necessary:

- a) I'll see you on Sunday.
- b) My friend Rob lives at 44 Sunnybank Drive, Ollerton, Southampton, SH2 5PB.

5. There are spelling mistakes:

- a) I came to Britain last autum.
- b) The children finished their diner and went outside.

Advice: Check your spelling with a dictionary if you are unsure and learn lists of common words:

- a) I came to Britain last autumn.
- b) The children finished their dinner and went outside.

15 Common Grammar Mistakes in Written and Oral Work

6. Sentences are long, rambling and repetitive:

- a) I wake up at 7 o'clock and have a shower and brush my hair and get dressed.
- b) We learnt about grammar and some of the students said they didn't like it, but I think it is a good subject for me because ...

Advice: Use short sentences with one or two phrases in each:

- a) I wake up at 7 o'clock and have a shower. Then I brush my hair and get dressed.
- b) We learnt about grammar and some of the students said they didn't like it. I think it is a good subject because ...

7. The words in the sentence are in the wrong order:

- a) Which programmes you don't like?
- b) I can go home now, please?

Advice: Check that words in each sentence are in the right order:

- a) Which programmes don't you like?
- b) Can I go home now, please?

8. There is incorrect punctuation:

- a) My sisters name is Zafreen, she lives with our parents in Leicester.
- b) What. is. your. favourite. colour.

Advice: Use punctuation correctly:

- a) My sister's name is Zafreen. She lives with our parents in Leicester.
- b) What is your favourite colour?

9. The answer is not relevant to the question, e.g. 'Describe a good friend':

- a) My name is Sandeep Singh. My address is 54 Park Lane, Wisbech, Cambridgeshire, WB12 4RW. I have two brothers and two sisters ...

Advice: Make sure that your answer is relevant to the question:

15 Common Grammar Mistakes in Written and Oral Work

11. A verb is missing from the sentence:

- a) I just spoken to Emma and she really busy.
- b) My boss leaving next week to start a new job.

Advice: Don't miss out verbs – even little ones!

- a) I have just spoken to Emma and she's really busy.
- b) My boss is leaving next week to start a new job.

12. A preposition is missing from a sentence:

- a) Bill Clinton was the 42nd President the USA.
- b) I put my bag the table.

Advice: Don't miss out prepositions, no matter how unimportant they look:

- a) Bill Clinton was the 42nd President of the USA.
- b) I put my bag on the table.

13. The meaning isn't clear or the sentence doesn't make sense:

- a) I got the train at six thirty and arrived when I got to work early.
- b) My favourite food is Chinese because I can't go out and get it very often.

Advice: Does your sentence make sense? Make sure the reader can understand what you are trying to say:

- a) I got the train at six thirty and arrived at work early.
- b) My favourite food is Chinese, but I don't go out and get it very often.

14. The infinitive is used incorrectly:

- a) I'm going talk about my country.
- b) Kevin wanted to going to the museum with his class.

Advice: Use the infinitive correctly – 'to' + infinitive, rather than mixed tenses:

- a) I'm going to talk about my country.
- b) Kevin wanted to go to the museum with his class.

15. There are incomplete sentences, e.g. a sentence that doesn't contain a subject-verb-object:

- a) Not good.
- b) We're going to.

Advice: Try not to use very short, incomplete sentences, e.g. a sentence that doesn't contain a subject-verb-object:

- a) That was not good.
- b) We're going to eat out later.

Tips for Better Written and Oral English Work

- Always check your work. When you think you've finished, check it again. Use a dictionary to help you find spellings that you are not sure of.
- Go to class regularly. Do your homework and hand it in on time. If your teacher doesn't give you any homework, ask for some. Ask for extra work to do at the weekend. If your teacher doesn't mark it, ask them to give you feedback. If you don't understand something in class, ask your teacher. Discuss English work with your friends at break-time and after class. Practise talking in English. Talk about it with your family. See if you can help your family to improve their English. Encourage them to go to a class.
- In written work – answer the question! To answer the question you must read the question! What does the question ask you to do? Make sure you do what it asks. If it says 'use a key' then use a key! If it says 'circle the correct letter – a, b, c or d' then circle the correct letter. If it says, 'write about your family', write about your family.
- Spend time deliberately learning vocabulary sets. You are always going to need to know the meanings and correct spellings of days, months, numbers, clothes, food, family members, your name and address, and so on. Practise at home. Make things much easier for yourself in class by learning these words in your free time.
- Plan written compositions before you start. Use a flow chart to help you think of about four or five ideas to write about or sketch out your ideas by writing notes on a rough piece of paper. Think: what do you want to say in this piece of writing? Start with a short introduction, then write a paragraph for each idea. Your final paragraph should draw the ideas together into a conclusion. Each paragraph should contain about four or five short sentences.
- Spend time deliberately learning basic verb tables – both regular and irregular – especially the four key irregular verbs: 'to be', 'to go', 'to have' and 'to do'. Learn different tenses: present/past simple, present/past continuous and present/past perfect. Learn the past participles of key irregular verbs, for example have/had, do/done. Make sure you can use many common verbs like 'eat', 'read', 'sleep' and 'go' to talk about your daily activities in both the present and past tenses.
- Read English language books and magazines. Read signs and notices. Write down any words or phrases that you don't understand and look them up. Keep a vocabulary notebook where you write down new words and phrases. Check it regularly.
- Watch English-language TV. Use subtitles so that you can match the words to the voices. Record programmes and play them back, pausing the action if it's going too quickly for you. Use the internet to find information in English. Use free online translation services to translate text into your language. Visit websites that have games and resources for learning English. Print out materials and test yourself at home. Recommend good websites that you find to your teachers and classmates.
- Use it or lose it! If you want to remember what you have learnt, make sure you use it every day. Practise speaking and listening, reading and writing every day. If possible, join a club or society or do a sporting or voluntary activity where you will meet native English speakers. Use your initiative!
- Don't give up! If it feels like you're not learning anything, persevere. You are doing fine.

Reading Comprehension 11 – Car Park Query

John works at a printer's. He is showing Mike, his new boss, which employee holds each of the ten spaces in the car park (see picture). Read or listen to what John says and complete the table below:

	1	2	3	4	5

- 7.
- 8.
- 9.
- 10.

Car makes: Seat Toyota Renault Ford Hyundai Peugeot

John:

"Well, your Renault Clio is over there on the end, next to number two, where there's another blue Clio, which, I think, belongs to Narinder, our HR Manager. Rob has parked his Ford – the red one – opposite yours. Three spaces along from Rob's there's a green Peugeot 206. That's Lisa's. She normally parks next to Tanya's silver Hyundai, which is on the end. The black Ford Focus opposite the Peugeot is Barbara's. She's a trainee. The white Toyota next to Rob's car belongs to Carrie, and Graham usually parks in between Narinder and Barbara. He's out today, but you'll normally see a red Seat there. On the right of the Ford Focus there's another car like Graham's, but newer – a brown one. I don't know who it belongs to. It was there yesterday as well. Your guess is as good as mine! My car's an Espace. I park in the other space. It's at the garage today because of the fan belt, so I had to come on the bus. I always have Renaults. They're so reliable, aren't they? It's the same colour as yours, by the way, but a bit darker."

Reading Comprehension 12 – Working out the Bill

Six friends – Amélie, Julia, Jan, Adam, Wai Ching, and Kevin – have just finished a fabulous meal at 'Jake's Pizzeria'. A waiter brings them their shared bill. After seeing the total, they decide to leave a gratuity of £9.00. Work out how much they all need to pay, including an equal share of the gratuity:

Kevin says:

"So, Amélie and Julia shared a medium margherita pizza, which was eleven pounds. Jan had the Classic Vegetable Tagliatelle, which was three pounds and a penny cheaper, and Wai Ching had an individual pizza – er, the Scrumptious Seafood – which was £6.99. Me and Adam both had the individual chicken thin crust pizza, which was the same price as Wai Ching's. I had extra cheese on mine, and Wai Ching had extra olives and extra tomatoes. The extra toppings were £1.49 each. No one had any side dishes, did they? Oh, I forgot; Julia and Adam had garlic bread, which costs £2.49. Amélie had a bottle of mineral water and Jan had lemonade. Wai Ching and Julia both had two bottles of beer. I had a vodka and orange, while Adam had a glass of wine. The soft drinks were £1.99 and the alcoholic drinks were a pound more, apart from the vodka, which was an extra 65p on top of that. We didn't have teas or coffees. They would have been £1.49 each, wouldn't they? Only four of us had desserts. Adam and Jan had the Fantastic Fudge Cake and Wai Ching had the strawberry cheesecake. Oh yes, I had the Death by Chocolate. How could I forget that? All the desserts were £3.99 each, apart from the cheesecake, which cost 50p less. Oh, hang on a minute! I haven't included Amélie and Julia's coffees."

Adam should pay: _____

Amélie should pay: _____

Julia should pay: _____

Jan should pay: _____

Wai Ching should pay: _____

Kevin should pay: _____

Total bill (including gratuity): _____

Average cost of meal
(round up to the nearest penny): _____

KATRINA:

"Brad was 'kind of' my new boyfriend. I met him last week at a friend's party. He took me out for a meal last night, but it didn't go very well. First of all, when he picked me up at my house, he said that it had been too (1.) _____ to find. Then, he didn't want to park in the free car park in Cathedral Street because the queue was too (2.) _____. We tried Market Street, but it was too (3.) _____. In the end we parked in Jury Lane, which was cheaper, but Brad was still moaning because he said it was too (4.) _____ from the restaurant.

"When we got to the restaurant I thought it was OK, but Brad said that it was too (5.) _____ and that he didn't feel comfortable around so many people, so we had to try somewhere else. We went to a little Italian place around the corner, but I thought it was too (6.) _____. There were only eight tables! It took us ages to get served, and when we eventually did Brad told the waitress that she was too (7.) _____. I think she went even slower after that – on purpose.

"When we got our food, Brad's pizza was too (8.) _____ so he burnt his mouth. My pasta was too (9.) _____, but I didn't want to complain because Brad was already doing enough of that for both of us! Then Brad told the waitress that the music was too (10.) _____ and the lights were too (11.) _____. Nothing was right for him. He even accused the very quiet and nice couple next to us of being too (12.) _____.

"When we left the restaurant, Brad wanted to go to a club, but I said I thought it was too (13.) _____, because I was tired and it was nearly quarter to midnight. He asked me if I wanted to go out with him again and I said I'd think about it, because I wasn't too (14.) _____ in seeing him again. I think he's fantastic-looking and he's got a nice car, but he's a bit too (15.) _____ for my taste. Give me someone more laid-back any day ... !"

Reading Katie's Diary

- A. Read Katie's diary (page 68). Write about 150 words describing what you imagine her life to be like. Use your imagination and plenty of adjectives and adverbs to describe her life and activities.

Here are some points that you could think about:

- What is her full name?
- How old is she?
- Where does she live?
- Does she live in a house or a flat, or something else?
- Who does she live with?
- How much money does she have?
- What does she do for a living?
- How much does she earn?
- What skills does she have?
- What are her strengths and weaknesses?
- Describe her appearance, or draw a picture of her.
- What type of clothes does she wear?
- Describe her family.
- Does she have a partner?
- Does she have any children?
- Describe her friends.
- What do her friends and family think of her?
- What are her hobbies and interests?
- What type of music does she like?
- What are her least favourite things?
- How often does she go out?
- Where does she go on holiday?
- How does she speak? Does she have an accent?
- What is she worried about at the moment?
- Is she happy?

- B. Draw a blank diary page, with spaces for a full week. Write an entry for each day, giving information about either your life or a friend's. Or, invent a character and write about them. You could even imagine a week in the life of a famous person – either living or dead! Then, use the above questions to help you write about 300 words about that person.

Who's the Gooseberry?

A 'gooseberry' is an insensitive person who spends time with a couple when they would rather be on their own!

Working with a partner, look at the information below about nine different people. There are five guys and four girls. You have to put together four couples and decide who should be the 'gooseberry', i.e. on their own.

Note: there are no right or wrong answers, but be ready to present your ideas to the class and give reasons for your choices.

Helen is 24 and works in a newsagent's. She likes reading and sewing. She doesn't like rude people or going to pubs and clubs. She is short, with black shoulder-length hair. She likes older men.

Meeta is 17. She's tall and has long dark hair. She likes going to the cinema and spending time with her friends. She's studying Art at college and works part-time. She doesn't like smoking.

Gordon is 40. He is looking for a partner who will be faithful, unlike his previous four wives. He is wealthy and enjoys spending money. He hasn't got any children. He's short and tanned.

Gerry is a teacher at a local primary school. He loves expensive holidays. He is of average height but overweight. He has got brown hair and usually wears a suit. He enjoys socialising with friends.

Louise works part-time as a dental nurse. She is a single mum. She's got two children aged 7 and 10. She is pretty and has got long brown hair. She's 32. She likes meals out and travelling to new places.

Lee is 59. He's a widower. He was married for 38 years and is now looking for another partner. He enjoys fishing and plays tennis regularly. He has three grown-up children. He is bald.

Jack is a former racing driver. He works abroad for six months of the year. He is looking for a partner with whom he can start a family. He's 36 and not particularly good looking, although he is slim. He smokes.

Glen is unemployed. He has been looking for a job for two years but has now given up. He's 26 and makes some money selling CDs by his folk band, The Assistants. He prefers quiet, petite women.

Shahla is 52 and recently divorced. She hopes to meet a man who will sweep her off her feet. She is slim and quite attractive. She likes tall, handsome men. She works in a bank and loves to cook.

Can You Follow Instructions?

Take a blank piece of paper and follow the instructions as your teacher reads them out. Tip: always listen to the complete instruction before doing anything!

1. Turn your paper on its side to landscape view.
2. Draw a large square in the centre of the page.
3. Draw a large circle in the middle of the square.
4. Draw a picture of a cat in the middle of the circle.
5. Write your first name in the bottom left-hand corner of the square.
6. Draw a small circle in the top right-hand corner of the square.
7. Draw a small triangle underneath the small circle.
8. Halfway between the top of the square and the top of the paper, draw a long horizontal line. The large square should be in the centre of the line.
9. Above the line in the centre draw a small cube.
10. Draw another small cube on either side of it. All the cubes should be the same size as each other.
11. To the right of the cubes, above the line, write today's date in capital letters in this format: day, ordinal number, month and full year. For example, MONDAY 5th DECEMBER 2005.
12. Write a capital 'B' on the front of the middle cube.

Now compare your page with your partner's and your teacher's. How similar are they?

The Very Quiet World of Silent Letters 1

Some words in the English language contain letters that are spelt but not pronounced. These letters sometimes affect the pronunciation of the words (e.g. 'bit' + 'e' changes to 'bite'), but sometimes they do not and appear to be completely unnecessary (e.g. 'rite' and 'write' are pronounced in the same way). These extra letters are often known as 'silent letters'.

Find a partner to work with. Write a different number from between 1 and 100 in each small square in both 'Me' grids. Your partner will do the same on their sheet. Ask your partner which numbers they have written in their grids and write them in the correct places on the 'My Partner' grids. Use prepositional phrases like: 'in the bottom left square on Grid 1' or 'in the top right corner square on Grid 2' to describe the position of each number.

Note: you could use the grid to repeat the exercise with different vocabulary groups instead of numbers. For example, letters of the alphabet, types of food, clothes, adjectives, and so on ...

Reading Skills

- 56-57 Note: as well as being used as reading comprehension tests, these worksheets could also be used with learners as oral tests. Method: read the text aloud and ask learners to make notes from what they hear. They should then compare their notes with a partner or the whole group. Read the text again and learners should check their notes and refine them, before comparing them again with their partner or group when you finish reading. You could then either ask the questions verbally or give learners a photocopy of the questions only. Check feedback with the whole group at the end of the activity. You could give learners a copy of the initial text for reference. With lower level groups you could do the reading and note-taking step a third time.

Speaking & Listening Skills

81 Method: The Amazing Maze Game is a fun activity for large or small groups, which could be used as an ice-breaker to practise memory skills and team-building, as well as prepositions vocabulary. First of all, decide on your route through the maze. Your class will have to find this route. They will find it by a process of trial and error, which will require them to watch each other's moves carefully and remember the route as it is uncovered. The aim of the activity is to find the correct route through the maze – your route. In the process, a shared memory of the route will be created by the group.

Each player chooses a counter and places it at the start. The first player moves their counter onto any space on the bottom line. If it's correct they can guess again. Players take turns in the game and can move left, right, forwards or backwards onto any space which is next to their current space. Players may move diagonally if they wish. It is better for players to 'pause' on each space and check with you that it's correct before continuing, rather than rushing ahead. The pace of the game should be slow and steady! Try not to give any clues as to whether or not players are 'hot' or 'cold' while they are choosing, until they have made their move. It's much more fun to keep a deadpan expression and let them keep guessing! If the player chooses a space that is not correct they must move their counter back to the start and the next player begins their turn. Play continues until the players find the route through the maze.

You can play the game as a team game where players are allowed to help each other, or as an individual contest, where players are responsible for remembering the route-in-progress themselves, without any help from the group. Make the activity harder by saying that students must speak only English throughout and if they use their own language they will have to return to the start and lose their turn. You could use this game to elicit and practise prepositions vocabulary and giving directions, for example: 'Go straight on', 'Turn left', 'Go back one space', and so on. You can always alter the dimensions and shape of the maze to suit your group and the time available. The bigger the maze and longer the route, the longer the activity will take. You could attach forfeits to particular spaces (for example: 'miss a turn', 'talk about your capital city for one minute' or 'sing your country's national anthem'). There are lots of possibilities for adapting this game. If you have time make a really big version of the maze out of a piece of fabric – big enough for students to be able to use themselves instead of counters and walk through the maze. It's great fun!

~~Introuction~~

Introduction

About twelve months ago I placed a classified ad in a national magazine for my website, English Banana.com. A member of the classified team took the wording I wanted over the phone and agreed to design the ad, using my site's logo, copied from the website. The wording I asked for was:

Quality photocopiabe worksheets for English lessons

www.englishbanana.com

Now available from bookshops

The ad cost almost £100, but I was happy to pay because of the exposure I believed it would bring to my website. When I bought a copy of the finished magazine I was initially pleased with the layout of the ad but then horrified by the spelling mistake. The wording read:

Quality photocopyable worksheets for English lessons

Apart from the unnecessary capital letter on "Available", the misspelled "photocopyable" jumped out at me from the page. Since I had already paid for the ad there was nothing I could do. What would you have felt like doing, if you had paid £100 for the ad? When I phoned up to find out what had happened the classified ads manager was blasé about the error. He said, "Does it really make that much of a difference?" I asked for a discount on the next ad and he started to haggle, saying, "What's the price of an 'i' or a 'y'?" What he meant, I suppose, was how could you quantify what a mistake like that was worth? I explained that my website is aimed at people learning English and that its reputation and authority as a teaching tool could be damaged by an ad that showed that we ourselves have problems with spelling. It is human nature that a reader would probably attribute the mistake of "photocopyable" to the company which the ad represents, despite the fault lying with the ad designer. In the end he gave me a discount of £25 on the next ad, which didn't run, because a few weeks later I had the chance to cancel it. I have not advertised in that esteemed organ since, which means that they have lost a trade customer due to a "y" instead of an "i". The classified ads manager raised a good question, though. Does it really make that much of a difference?

It seems that almost everyone has read The Da Vinci Code by Dan Brown. But would you have picked up the book – let alone bought it – if the title on the cover had been spelled The Da Vinci Cod? Even though the entire contents of the book may have been mistake-free in terms of spelling and grammar, the misspelled title on the cover would have put off the majority of people from buying it. Why? Because it's wrong. Everyone knows that the correct title is The Da Vinci Code. There is general agreement about the spelling of the word "Code".

If the title wasn't spelled right, how could you be sure that the rest of the book wasn't also full of mistakes? We need to have confidence that what we are reading is right. We all make mistakes when writing English. Some of them can be spotted if we take time to check our work. Other mistakes are made because our spelling skills need improving or there is a lack of understanding about certain areas of use in grammar; for example when and how to use a comma.

All of the examples in this book are adapted from actual examples of English that I have spotted during the past twelve months. This is English as written by people who speak and write English as their first language (and, no doubt in many cases, their only language). Educated people. People who have, in most cases, enjoyed as many as sixteen years of full-time education. People who have been to university and graduated with first- and second-class degrees. People who have achieved high-paying jobs in advertising and marketing without ever really fully understanding the possessive role of the apostrophe.

So as not to infringe the copyright of the original authors, I have re-written each text in my own words, but kept the original mistake as well as the context in which it was found. So as not to confuse things, there is only one mistake in each text – so that means one mistake per page. Your challenge is to find the mistake, state which kind of mistake it is (out of the six categories – apostrophes, articles, doesn't make sense, punctuation, singular/plural and spelling), then write a corrected version. If you can't find a mistake, check the answers at the back of the book, starting on page 61. If you need help with any of the terms used in the book, for example 'common noun' or 'adverb', there is an A-Z of English Grammar Words, which starts on page 77.

I should perhaps say at this point that I'm not a hopelessly pedantic busybody who goes around looking for errors and taking pleasure in other people's mistakes. I'm an English teacher who is interested in helping others to learn about words and how to use them more successfully. I have found all the texts from which my examples are adapted during normal reading of newspapers, magazines, books, leaflets, posters and websites, rather than scanning material endlessly in search of mistakes. Since we all make mistakes and don't always use good grammar and spelling in private correspondence, e.g. emails, letters and text messages, I have excluded this kind of writing from the book and focused instead on English which has been written for a wider audience – i.e. for the general public to read.

This is English that is looking for an audience, be it an advert, travel book or leaflet, newspaper article or website. These examples all come from texts that have been designed to communicate with more than one person. Perhaps this makes the mistakes more surprising. Many of these mistakes – perhaps even the majority – could have been avoided if their authors had checked and re-checked their work before publishing it or sending it off to be printed. By doing so they would have improved the level of communication (the primary aim of any piece of writing – to tell the reader something) and avoided making the organisation they represent look less professional.

The sources for these texts are wide-ranging: they are not simply misprints culled from humble parish magazines. They reflect what I have been reading over the past twelve months. I ended up finding so many mistakes that I thought they would form the basis of a useful workbook for anyone who wants to improve their written English. Not just students of English, but anyone who writes with the hope of someone reading their work – i.e. anyone who writes with the purpose of communication. The examples in this book include professional texts written by employees of major organisations, such as a national broadcaster, an international bank and a popular film monthly. There are also examples adapted from texts produced by smaller organisations, such as a large further education college, a regional tourism marketing group and a specialist publishing company. Amateur texts, written by people who don't write for a living, are represented by material adapted from the likes of a local folk club's "What's On?" flyer, a local carnival brochure and a large cathedral's weekly newsletter.

I hope that this new book will help you as you aim to make your written English:

- a) clearer (and therefore more valuable to both you and your reader)
- b) more impressive (making you or your company look more professional)

When you go to a supermarket you will usually see enormous signs outside the store, made from huge Perspex letters several feet high. Often they light up at night and you can see them from far and wide. You can be certain that these words will be spelled correctly – for a reason. What about your English?

Check it again! Then, if in doubt, check it again.

Sir –

I would like to extend my heartfelt thanks to the staff and passengers at Heathrow Airport who came to my assistance when I was unfortunate enough to suffer a fall prior to departing on holiday on Thursday 12th May. I was assisted by a small group of cabin crew who happened to be passing when I fell. I should thank Irina in particular, for staying with me for well over an hour and ensuring that I caught my flight on time. It is heartening in this day and age to know that such kindness exists even in a place such as an crowded airport. I was able to continue my journey as planned and arrive the other end with “no harm done”. My son would also like to extend his grateful thanks.

Sincerely, Laura Friedman, London

You're clearly spend a lot of time researching and preparing for roles ...

Yes, I think it's important if you want to look authentic in the role. Sometimes it would be easier to just turn up on the first day of shooting and do ... whatever the director asks you to do. But you should push yourself in life. You have to try harder. That's how you get better results.

Of course, nobody expects politicians to make nice, spend time in their constituency listening to the likes of you and me, and save the planet all in the same week. But it would be wonderful if we could rely on them to actually appear in the House of Commons every once in a while. If only to remind themselves where it is.

The restaurant was packed and we were initially unsure whether we would get in, but eventually a harassed-looking waitress appeared and showed us to our table, which was pleasantly situated near a large bay window, with an enchanting view of the Japanese gardens and a an adventure playground, where a group of small children were evidently making full use of all the facilities!

Around Birmingham

When it comes to Birmingham city centre there are an unbelievable variety of things to do. If you enjoy bargain-hunting at all the latest stores, why not try the New Bull Ring Centre – a shrine to good shopping! There are also many opportunities to get cultural. Whether you enjoy museums, galleries, cinemas, or just chilling out in chic little bars and eateries, Birmingham city centre has – rather astonishingly – got the lot!

Go to work on an egg ...

EGGS – BRITAIN'S BREAKFAST FAVOURITES

THE HUMBLE egg has come top of a survey that lists the top ten breakfast foods among British families. In a new survey, by NewPoll, more than 45 per cent said they “often” ate a hard-boiled egg and soldiers before setting off for work, while a whopping 55 per cent of those said they had didn’t want to contemplate a day at the grindstone without tucking into a home-cooked breakfast first.

Tapescript 4.1:

L = Leanne C = Carolyn

L: Hello, Madam. Are you looking for anything in particular?

C: I need a new skirt for a job interview. But it must match this jacket.

L: What about his one? It's the same colour.

C: No, I think it's a bit too dark.

L: Well what about this one?

C: Yes, that looks like a good match. Can I try it on?

Gill's gang of misfits has confounded its critics by returning with a totally barnstorming collection of classic funk sounds. The problem is that they just don't seem to know when to stop! They seem unable to know when it's time to end a track. Some of the tunes rumble on for upwards of quarter of an hour, before ending completely without warning, as if someone has simply pulled the plug out of their "Funk Machine".

Owen bounces back to number one

Veteran Welsh rocker Owen Williams has stormed straight to the top of the UK singles chart, with his latest release Never Be Lonely (When You've Got A Friend).

It is the first track to be taken from his new greatest hits album, which is released on Monday. The album has been hotly anticipated by fans, but seen by music critic as marking the end of Williams's long and distinguished pop career.

Williams commented last night: "There's life in the old dog yet. I hope I've still got one or two more hits in me." His greatest hits album includes eleven UK number one singles.

Parkinson describes writing new history as “labour of love”

Historian Daniel Parkinson has said that he took fifteen years to write a new book about the Battle of Trafalgar as simply being one of artistic integrity. In “Love, Death and Glory at Trafalgar” Parkinson claims to bring new insights into the strategies employed by Admiral Lord Nelson. He explained: “The new book has taken so long because there are so many sources available and I like to immerse myself in all of them. What is the great hurry, after all? Writing should be a leisurely process. It takes time for thoughts and hypotheses to ferment and come together.”

I spent a relaxing afternoon wandering the impressive malls and tiny boutiques on George Street and around Macquarie Place, before sampling some culture at the Museum of Contemporary Art. A few minutes and a short cab ride later, I was strolling along Bondi Beach, trouser legs rolled up to the ankle; suddenly part of the Aussie beach scene. Sydney, it seemed was a city of striking contrasts.

Bloomin' Marvellous Work!

The Shepherdsfield Young Liberal Democrats have been labouring away in the garden all summer long, organising a successful clean-up campaign that has transformed the gardens of more than a hundred elderly or infirm people in the local area.

A small team of enthusiastic volunteers has spent the last four Saturdays pulling weeds, trimming lawns and planting shrubs. On the final day a competition was held to decide which gardens had undergone the greatest transformation. Local Liberal Democrat councillor Margaret Smeghurst handed over first prize of a bottle of bubbly to Mr & Mrs Halliwell, who live on Matlock Crescent, Morley Way.

The use of technology in the classroom has revolutionised the way some teachers work. Interactive whiteboards, digital television and the use of email to submit homework have transformed the way that students can engage with their classroom environment. Clear and effective communication is still the foremost priority in any teaching situation, but the way that students and teachers are now interacting – both with each other and the resources they have access to – has fundamentally changed. Above all this, means that many teachers have had to go “back to school” themselves and learn how to plug into the digital age. (A lesson that has been hard to learn for those who had only just begun to get to grips with the transition from blackboard and chalk to whiteboard and marker pen.)

Last Night's TV
With Carl Douglas

BBC 1, 8pm Joe's Choice

I watched this sit-com for the first time last night and found it affable enough, although short on big belly laughs. The premise involves a brace of painter and decorators – former union leader Joe (played by Jack Dumas) and his mate Terry (Simon Sims). The bungling duo are to the decorating trade what a slap in the face is to a well-intentioned octogenarian. The laughs are supposed to spring from the eco-friendly duo attempting to put right their botched jobs in a way that's “ethical and doesn't leave much in the way of a global footprint” – Joe and Terry's motto. I got the feeling that Dumas is simply slumming it in this show, which is more of a vehicle for Sims and is trademark slapstick routines. Not one to avoid, but fairly forgettable. Carl's Choice – I'll probably give it a miss next time, I'm afraid.

People Power - Getting Results

I'm pleased to report that in the last couple of months we have been able to help more than 400 people find work. For many of those it was the first time they had been in employment for several years. Everyone at People Power everyone plays an enormously important role in helping ordinary people back into sustainable employment. A big thank you to all our staff in all our centres around the country. What you do really does change people's lives for the better.

With warm wishes to you all,

Marilyn

Owen Williams – showman

REVIEW Birmingham NEC

Fans at his sellout show in Birmingham gave Owen Williams an ecstatic response last night as he rolled back the years and treated us to a rock 'n' roll spectacular par excellence. It was like 1982 all over again as Williams sprinted energetically through all his memorable hits, as well as some superb new tunes. Sales of his latest release, Never Be Lonely (When You've Got A Friend), have now past the 2 million mark in the UK alone.

~~Answer's~~

Answers

Answers

1. doesn't make sense

There is a "to" missing from the last sentence. It should read: "If you've got a lot to offer, we want to hear from you today."

2. doesn't make sense

In this example there is an unnecessary "the" in the second sentence, before "chips". The sentence should read: "The chips were also cooked to a high standard."

3. punctuation

The word "event" does not need a capital letter. It is a common noun, not a proper noun, and therefore should start with a small "e". In contrast, "Nature Journal Monthly" is the name of the magazine and as such is a proper noun and needs a capital letter at the start of each part of its name. "May", "June" and "April" are also proper nouns and should start with capital letters because they are names of months. "Please", "The" and "Thank" all start with a capital letter because they are the first words in their sentences.

4. punctuation

There is a stray single speech mark at the beginning of the word "fallen". Perhaps the author meant to write 'fallen out' in single speech marks, as a way of highlighting this phrase, but forgot to close the speech marks.

5. articles

The mistake is in the sentence which begins: "It is heartening in this day and age ...". The author has written "an crowded airport" where it should read: "a crowded airport". The article "an" is only used when the word which follows it begins with a vowel sound, such as "an orange", "an accident" or "an unexpected incident". The words which come after "an" in these examples – "orange", "accident" and "unexpected" – all start with a vowel sound: sounds made when using the vowels in English – a, e, i, o and u. The word "crowded" starts with a hard "c" sound, rather than a vowel sound, so it can't be preceded by the article "an". Article "a" is the right one to use.

6. apostrophes

In this example there is an apostrophe missing. There must be an apostrophe between “creature” and “s” to show possession – the “name” belongs to the “creature”. It is the “creature’s name”. Without a possessive apostrophe the word “creatures” could be taken to be plural (more than one “creature”), which then wouldn’t make sense in the sentence, because the first word “This ...” is only used before singular words (“These” would be used before plural words, e.g. “This creature” and “These creatures”). Without the possessive apostrophe “s” after “creature”, the meaning of the sentence is lost.

7. doesn’t make sense

This is a case of an unnecessary verb. Instead of “You’re” in the first sentence, the author should have simply used the personal subject pronoun “You”.

8. spelling

The correct word the author of this sign was looking for here was “nobody”, rather than two words “no body”. If you have any doubts about how to spell a word, always check your dictionary.

9. apostrophes

It must be hard being called “Williams”, because people often seem to get this name wrong when it comes to making it possessive. This superstar singing sensation’s name is “Owen Williams”. It says so in the advert. But in the title the author has altered his name to “Owen William”, then added apostrophe “s” to make it possessive – the “Greatest Hits” belong to “Owen William”. However, the “Greatest Hits” should belong to “Owen Williams”, so the correct title should read: “Owen Williams’s Greatest Hits” – the apostrophe “s” coming after the full name of this mega-selling balladeer. There are differing opinions about this. Some editors would favour “Owen Williams” over “Owen Williams’s”, but “Owen William’s” is completely wrong, because it alters the spelling of the singer’s last name by missing off the final “s”.

10. punctuation

Although the fictional magazine “New Jazz Monthly” really enjoyed this new album from the fictional sensitive singer-songwriter Harriet Clarke, their review in this print advertisement lacks a certain amount of credibility because there is a single speech mark missing from the beginning. It should read: ‘An astonishing new collection’.

11. doesn't make sense

“Of course, nobody expects politicians to make nice ...” – to make nice what? Unfortunately, we will never know what the author intended to say, although perhaps the missing word was “speeches”, or “policies”. In this example there is a common noun missing after the adjective “nice”. “Nice” is describing something, but what it describes is absent and instead we move breathlessly on to the next clause (or part) of the sentence.

12. apostrophes

In this example, the owners of the museum need to sit down and have a long think about what the name of their museum should be. In the title – “Shaw’s House Museum” – they have used the apostrophe correctly: the “House”, or even the “House Museum”, belong to “Shaw” (whoever he or she is). But in the address section the name of the museum is unceremoniously stripped of its apostrophe to become plain old: “Shaws House Museum”. Since consistency is one of the hallmarks of good writing, the author would be better off choosing one or the other of the two titles and sticking to it. I would favour the first – “Shaw’s House Museum” – because it uses the possessive apostrophe “s” in a grammatically correct way. We know that “Shaw” is an English surname, so we can guess that the name of the museum indicates that the house (or the house museum) belongs to (or used to belong to) a person named Shaw. In which case, the author needs to use the possessive apostrophe “s”.

13. apostrophes

This example is alarming because not only does it make an error with a possessive apostrophe “s” – it makes it worse by repeating the error three more times. We learn that “Hair and Beauty World” (on the High Street) have provided lots of goods and services for the Carnival Queen. These things now belong to the Carnival Queen, so we must show this possession – that the hair, outfit, make-up and shoes belong to her – by using an apostrophe “s” after “Carnival Queen” on each of the four occasions it is needed, e.g. “Carnival Queen’s hair”, and so on.

14. spelling

This example came from an online pop-up advertisement on a website which was designed and created by someone working for one of the biggest multinational corporations on earth – which should give hope to the rest of us, who also sometimes make unnecessary spelling errors like this one. “Click to find our more” should, of course, read: “Click to find out more”.

15. articles

The author of this report is hedging their bets by using both articles before the word “adventure”, when choosing the right one for the job would be preferable! It should read: “... and an adventure playground”. We need to use article “an” before “adventure” because “adventure” starts with a vowel sound – “a” for angry, aggravated and anteater.

16. singular / plural

There is a mix-up in the first sentence to do with using “there are” instead of “there is”. It should read: “... there is an unbelievable variety of things to do”. This mistake is understandable, because the second part of the sentence – “variety of things to do” – appears to indicate more than one thing – and makes the sentence look plural. Therefore the writer uses the plural verb “are” (from verb “to be”) with “there” to form the structure “there are...”. However, before the plural bit we can see a singular article “an” which overrides the end of the sentence and tells us that the subject of the sentence – “unbelievable variety of things to do” – is in actual fact singular. The main noun in this sentence – “variety” – is singular, despite the fact that it means many things. We would say “a variety of chocolates” (with singular article “a”) not “some variety of chocolates” (with plural determiner “some”). Confusing, eh?

17. doesn't make sense

There is an unnecessary verb (“had”) in the second sentence. It should read: “... a whopping 55 per cent of those said they didn't want to contemplate a day at the grindstone without tucking into a home-cooked breakfast first.”

18. doesn't make sense

This example, from a tapescript written and produced by a leading UK publisher of English language teaching materials, doesn't make sense because there is one letter missing from the third speech. Leanne should say: “What about this one?” rather than “What about his one?”

19. singular / plural

The incorrect word here is “its”. This word is used with a singular subject (just one person or one thing) to tell us that someone or something belongs to it. For example, “The cat finished its dinner” (the “dinner” belongs to “The cat”). However, because the subject of the sentence is “dresses” (plural) the possessive word needs to reflect this, so we would use “their” instead of “its”. It should read: “Since the dresses are meant to be classic and elegant, their designers have spent ...” If the writer had written: “Since the dress ...” (singular) we would then need to talk about “its designers ...”, using singular possessive determiner “its”: “Since the dress is meant to be classic and elegant, its designers have spent ...”

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

20. articles

The article “the” is not really necessary in the second sentence. Mr. Newell could have said: “... from September 20th ...” or “... from the 20th September ...”, but not “... from the September 20th ...”

21. apostrophes

There should be an apostrophe after “12 months” because “half price line rental” belongs to, or is related to, “12 months”. This sentence literally means: “12 months of half price line rental”. If the offer was less generous and only gave 1 month of half price line rental, you would be able to see the need for an apostrophe more clearly: “1 month’s half price line rental”. It wouldn’t look right if we put “1 months half price line rental” because “months” (a plural form) cannot follow “1” (a singular form).

22. spelling

The mistake in this example is in the third sentence. We can talk about an “inability” to do something, but the word “inable” doesn’t exist. The correct word in this sentence is “unable”. The sentence should read: “They seem unable to know when it’s time to end a track”.

23. spelling

This example was adapted from a quotation printed on the front cover of an autobiography by a famous public figure. The word “their” should be spelled “thief”.

24. apostrophes

The answer to this example is very similar to that of example no. 21. The meaning of the sentence is: “What would you say to 6 weeks of free DVD rental?” If we use “of” then we don’t need an apostrophe. If we remove “of” to shorten the sentence (perhaps to make it flow better) then we need to add an apostrophe to show that the two phrases (“6 weeks” and “free DVD rental”) are related to each other. We wouldn’t write: “1 weeks free DVD rental”. It would look wrong, and we would know to add an apostrophe between “week” and “s”. But when it is more than one week (plural “weeks”) it is less clear what to do – whether to add an apostrophe or not – and so some of us simply leave it out. This is a very common mistake which can be seen on posters or leaflets in virtually any mobile phone shop, or car dealership in the country; indeed anywhere where you can get: “12 months interest free credit” or “2 years servicing free of charge”. Both of these sentences need an apostrophe (after “months” and “years”). If you can put the word “of” after the number of weeks, months or years, then you need to use an apostrophe. For example: “12 months of interest free credit” can be shortened to: “12 months’ interest free credit”. The apostrophe comes after the “s” in these examples because there is more than one month and year. We couldn’t write “12 month’s ...” because the word month must have an “s” to make it plural, because there is more than one month.

25. punctuation

In this example there is a comma missing from after “games” in the last line. If you want to make a list of items, you need to use a comma to separate each one. The last line should read: “... you’ll have easy access to all your music, games, films and photos – instantly!” This makes the sentence easier to read, because all the items in the list are now neatly prevented from running into each other by the commas. Apart from the last two items in the list, which are separated by “and”. Some people would put a comma before “and” as well, but this isn’t necessary. A good list needs a comma after each item, apart from the second to last item, which is followed by “and”, then the final item. Like this:

26. singular / plural

The mistake comes in the second paragraph, where the word “critic” should be the plural “critics”. If we wanted to write “music critic” – singular – we would have to use an article to show that we meant just one, i.e. “a music critic”. It’s unlikely that a short entertainment news item like this would refer to just one music critic; rather the article wants to get across the feeling that a consensus has been reached about Mr Williams’s illustrious career in music by a whole gaggle of music critics.

27. spelling

A misspelled logo, similar to the one in this example, could be seen for several hours in the top right-hand corner of the screen during programmes broadcast by a well-known music channel. That is, until someone at the channel spotted the mistake – or perhaps a viewer called in and told them about it – and the misspelled word “Carribean” was replaced with the correctly spelled: “Caribbean”.

28. doesn't make sense

The first sentence of this article simply doesn't make sense. Perhaps a sub-editor working on this top-ranking news website had hastily edited the article and put it back online with a few vital phrases missing – without checking it properly. Perhaps the intention of the author for the first sentence was something like this (although other answers would fit as well): “Historian Daniel Parkinson has described his decision to take fifteen years to write a new book about the Battle of Trafalgar as simply being one of artistic integrity”. This fits because there is now an object to the sentence – “his decision” – which relates to “one” later on in the sentence. Using “one” is a shorter way to write, because there is no need to repeat the abstract noun “decision”. We wouldn't write: “Historian Daniel Parkinson has described his decision to take fifteen years to write a new book about the Battle of Trafalgar as simply being a decision of artistic integrity”. We know that the author is talking about the “decision” when they write “one”. But in the original example there isn't a noun (any thing) earlier on in the sentence for the “one” to relate to.

29. apostrophes

In this example, there should be an apostrophe after “women” to indicate possession, because the “clothes sale” belongs to, or is related to the “women”. The sentence should read: “WOMEN'S CLOTHES SALE”. “Women” is a plural word, meaning more than one woman, so we can assume that the sale features clothes that are suitable for more than one woman. The word “women” is already plural (despite not having an “s” at the end), so there is no such word as “womens”. “Womens” is not plural of the word “woman”. It is a made up word. It is clear that the author meant “womens” as “women” plus possessive apostrophe “s”. They just forgot to use the apostrophe.

30. punctuation

As well as helping us to separate items in a list, the comma is used to separate clauses in sentences. This is so that the sentences are easier to read and the author's intended meaning is clearer. In general, punctuation helps us to organise our words and make what we want to express easier to understand. The mistake in this example comes in the last sentence. The words “it seemed” are a separate clause within this sentence, and as such should be separated from the rest of the sentence by two commas. The author has added one comma, but forgot to add the second, after “seemed”. The sentence should read: “Sydney, it seemed, was a city of striking contrasts”. Here is a similar use of commas to separate clauses within a sentence: “The bus, which was late, came bouncing down the road at breakneck speed”. The clause “which was late” gives us useful information about the context of the arrival of the bus. We need to separate this clause from the rest of the sentence to make it easier to read – the action becomes clearer. If we didn't use commas at all it would read like this: "The bus which was late came bouncing down the road at breakneck speed", which isn't very clear, and is certainly harder to read.

31. punctuation

This example shows a style error: a use of punctuation which is unnecessary, or doesn't look very nice and which doesn't add anything to the information that the author is trying to put across, namely the four exclamation marks after "Sunday 16th April". It isn't necessary to put even one exclamation mark after this date, but clearly the author wanted to draw our attention to the date, and felt that four exclamation marks was the best way to achieve this. The result, though, looks silly because three of the exclamation marks are redundant. Only teenage girls writing top secret diaries should be allowed to sprinkle punctuation marks around so freely. Not adults who are writing for adult readers, and certainly not authors of cathedral newsletters!!!! See, it does look a bit silly and breathless, doesn't it? Of course, this is not a mistake; it's rather a style error, and these are sometimes in the eye of the beholder. For example, some readers may feel strangely exhilarated by seeing such a liberal and uncensored use of the exclamation mark. Similar style errors include: "Excessive use of the exclamation mark and question mark together!???!!??!" to indicate disbelief, and: "Using 'smileys' after everything you write ;o))" These things are fine when writing for family or friends, when writing informal emails and text messages or even just for your own pleasure, but they start to look patronising and out of place when they appear in something that has been written for a wider audience; particularly an adult audience.

32. articles

The mistake in this example comes in the second sentence, where the wrong article is used before "idea". Because this word starts with a vowel sound, the indefinite article should be "an" rather than "a". The sentence should read: "Tonight, a student from Wales has an idea for ..."

33. singular /plural

The word "What's ..." is a short form (or contraction) of the verb "to be". The full form is "What is ...". "Is" is a singular form of this verb ("he is, she is, it is"), while "are" is a plural form ("we are", "they are"). For this reason, you can't follow "What's ..." with a plural noun such as "chances". It is necessary to change the verb to the plural form "What're ..." (which is a contraction of "What are ...") so that the corrected sentence reads: "What're the chances of a manned mission to Mars?"

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

34. spelling

There is a spelling mistake on the fourth line of this example. The word “closedown” should read “close down”. “To close down” is a verb form (a phrasal verb, which means a verb (“close”) with a preposition (“down”) working together as one verb or one action). The sentence is describing the action that the store will take (i.e. it will close down). The author has incorrectly used “closedown”, which is a noun that describes the process of closing down. For example, this would be fine: “There will be a closedown in our store at 6 pm”. There is a clue that “closedown” is a noun here because it requires an article. “Close down”, on the other hand, is correct for our example because it’s a verb and fits together with “will” to complete the future tense verb form, which begins with the subject: “Our existing store ...”, continues with the verb phrase: “... will close down ...” and ends with an adverbial clause (showing the time): “... at 6.00pm on Saturday 17th June”.

35. apostrophes

This is a straightforward case of a missing apostrophe. The “Life” belongs to the “Child” – the two words are related – so there must be a possessive apostrophe “s” after “Child”. We know that the plural form of the noun “Child” would be “Children”, which tells us there is no such word as “Childs” – it isn’t in the dictionary; it isn’t the plural of “Child”. The sentence should read: “Improve a Child’s Life”.

36. doesn’t make sense

On the face of things, this table of British Prime Ministers looks totally bona fide and makes for fascinating reading. However, if you study the dates closely you will find that one of these illustrious political leaders is out of synch with his cohorts. The dates don’t match up. According to these dates George Grenville was Prime Minister before the Earl of Bute, but the dates are round the wrong way, because the Earl was actually Prime Minister between 1762-63, while Grenville (whose nickname in Parliament was “Gentle Shepherd”, incidentally) was Prime Minister between 1763-65. It always pays to double-check all the data before you publish complicated tables of factual information.

37. punctuation

Here’s an example where the author has tried to use an apostrophe correctly, but instead ended up using a single speech mark incorrectly. “Baby of the Year ‘05” should read: “Baby of the Year ’05”. In the example the author has put a single speech mark before “05” when they clearly meant to use an apostrophe. The difference is that the tail of the apostrophe points the opposite way to the tail of the single speech mark. Some word-processing programs help to make this a common error because when you type apostrophe followed by "05" you will normally get: '05. This is because the program assumes that you are writing something enclosed in single speech marks and automatically provides you with the first part of the single speech marks – which is not the apostrophe that you wanted. Sometimes it is necessary to show the word-processing program who's boss!

38. apostrophes

This special promotion for students, sponsored by a major UK bank, has been running for years and is promoted by hundreds of thousands of glossy leaflets and posters – all of them missing an apostrophe after "person". It's enough to make a "person" really frustrated! The correct phrase should be: "a free 4-year Young Person's Travel Card". We know this because the "Travel Card" belongs to the "Young Person" – or at least it will if they apply for this special offer. In this example, "Person" is a singular noun. Nobody uses the word "persons" to describe more than one person (plural); we would say "people" instead. If the author of this promotion wanted to use the plural word "people", they would still have to employ the services of an apostrophe – "Young People's Travel Card" – because the "Travel Card" still belongs to the "Young People". It's not good enough to go on printing "Young Persons Travel Card" on hundreds of thousands of leaflets and posters year after year and just hope for the best that no one will spot this easily-corrected mistake.

39. spelling

In this example the mistake comes in the last line, where "every day" should be "everyday". The difference is important: "every day" is an adverbial describing a period of time when something happens. For example, "I go for a walk every day". On the other hand, "everyday" is an adjective which is used before a noun to describe something that is ordinary or run-of-the-mill or normal, for example: "Shop at Debbie's – for everyday value and service". The sentence should read: "... be able to participate with confidence in all sorts of everyday situations".

40. doesn't make sense

There is a short word missing from the second sentence; before "make" it is necessary to add the word "to". We always talk about having the chance to ... something. For example, "The chance to make ... / to go ... / to do ... / to own ...", and so on. The sentence should read: "Children will have the chance to make their own models ..."

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

41. spelling

There is a spelling mistake in paragraph 4. – “we’ll *l*send you more!” should read “we’ll send you more!” Clearly this is a typing or editing error rather than a straightforward misspelling. Perhaps the extra “l” had belonged to the previous word – “we’ll” – in an earlier draft of the text. This mistake should have been picked up when the leaflet was proof-read, but wasn’t, and as a consequence appeared on hundreds of thousands of leaflets which were distributed inside a variety of top-selling glossy magazines.

42. apostrophes

There shouldn’t be an apostrophe in the word “one’s” because this word is the plural form of “one”. It doesn’t have a possessive relationship with the word that follows and it isn’t part of a verb form (verb “to be” – “one is ...”). In this sentence “ones” refers to the word “pictures” from the previous sentence and is in the plural form because “pictures” is plural – more than one picture. We can talk about choosing “the one you want” – which indicates one thing (singular) or “the ones you want”, depending on whether what you are talking about (in this case “your pictures”) is singular or plural. The sentence should read: “... review your pictures on screen and choose the ones you want”.

43. punctuation

The problem with punctuation in this example comes in the title: “What the Heritage Committee is doing about it?” If you take away the question mark at the end, this sentence is fine. After reading this title you would expect to be able to read all about what the heritage committee is doing about “it” – whatever “it” is. But if the author intended to ask a question, this sentence is incorrect because it doesn’t use a question form. To make a question form you would need to invert the verb (“to be”), which means putting it before the subject of the sentence (“the Heritage Committee”) rather than after. So the title could read either: “What the Heritage Committee is doing about it” (without the question mark) or “What is the Heritage Committee doing about it?” (with the question mark) – depending on what the author wanted to write in the article that follows.

44. spelling

The spelling mistake in this example comes in the first sentence. “... a much high quality selection of games ...” should read: “... a much higher quality selection of games ...” The reason for this is that we can’t use a simple adjective like “high” with “much”. We need to use the comparative form of the adjective – “higher” – because the sentence is making a comparison. It’s comparing the number of games and movies available now with the many more titles that will be available by Christmas. We could see the full comparative sentence if the author had completed the comparison by using: “than they have now” at the end of the sentence. For example: “By Christmas, owners of the new Channel Hoppa console will have a much higher quality selection of games and movies from which to choose than they have now”. However, this is excessively wordy and the meaning of the sentence is clear without using “than...”

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

45. apostrophes

There is an apostrophe missing from the end of “minutes” in the last line of this example. If the author had written “50 minutes away” an apostrophe after “minutes” wouldn’t be necessary because “50 minutes” is a straightforward adverbial phrase, describing the distance between two places by reference to a period of time. Because the author puts in a noun – “drive” – after the adverbial phrase (“50 minutes”) they create a possessive relationship between the “50 minutes” and the “drive”. The meaning becomes: “50 minutes of driving ...” We can test out the need for an apostrophe here by looking at what would happen if the minutes were reduced to just one minute: “1 minute’s drive”. We still need an apostrophe; we couldn’t write “1 minutes drive” because since “1” is singular it cannot be followed by the plural noun form “minutes”. The author could have used the more straightforward phrase: “a 50 minute drive away from ...” but “50 minutes’ drive away” must include an apostrophe after “minutes” (the plural form, because there are fifty of them) to be grammatically correct.

46. spelling

This spelling mistake, spotted on a leaflet at a large country hotel, was probably a typing mistake which wasn’t corrected when the leaflet was proofread – if it was proofread at all. When spelling the time we wouldn’t write “1 O’clock” with a capital “O”, but rather with all lower case letters, like this: “1 o’clock”. This mistake may have been caused by an over-eager word-processing program, which automatically altered the “o” in “o’clock” – perhaps it thought it was starting a new sentence. New sentences always start with a capital letter. It shows the value of sitting down with whatever you have just typed and printed off the computer and spending a few minutes reading it through slowly, looking for straightforward mistakes like this one. Those extra few minutes spent proof-reading – and then perhaps editing and reprinting your work – will really pay dividends, because the image that your work projects afterwards will be far more professional.

47. punctuation

The punctuation mistake in this example can be found in the last sentence, where there is a single space missing between the words “Mr” and “&”. It should read: “... Margaret Smeghurst handed over first prize of a bottle of bubbly to Mr & Mrs Halliwell ...” It is important to remember to put a single space between each word in a sentence. In this example, “&” should be treated as a separate word (“and”), even though it represents “and” as a symbol.

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

48. spelling

The misspelled word in this example is “programme”. In the UK we use the word “programme” as a noun (a thing) to talk primarily about something on television or radio, e.g. “a television programme”. The author of this advert tries to use the common noun “programme” as a verb, when the verb form should be spelled with the American English spelling: “program”. In American English the noun form (“TV program”) and verb form (“to program your VCR”) are spelled the same, while in British English there is still this distinction, perhaps because the verb “to program” is still relatively new to us. The sentence should read: “Program your 10 favourite tracks”. It is worth noting that in British English we do use “program” as a common noun when talking about computer software, e.g. “a new computer program for word-processing”.

49. apostrophes

The problem with apostrophes comes in the third sentence, which should read: “The students’ union has its own facilities on both campuses ...” We use the word “its” because “its” is a possessive form which describes the relationship between “The students’ union” and “facilities on both campuses”. The facilities belong to the students’ union. The word “it’s” is completely different. It is a verb form, which can indicate not one but two verbs – either verb “to be”, as in “it is”, or verb “to have”, as in “it has”. “Its” is a possessive adjective, like “my”, “your”, “his”, “her”, “our” and “their”, which relates to the pronoun “it”, meaning a thing, an object or a place. In fact, anything which doesn’t have a gender (male or female). “The students’ union” is a place, an inanimate object which doesn’t have a gender, so the right possessive form to use is “its”.

50. punctuation

The punctuation mistake comes in the second to last sentence, which starts “Above all ...” The problem is with the comma, which has been put in the wrong place. It should be used to separate the two clauses: “Above all ...” and the rest of the sentence, so that the sentence should read: “Above all, this means that many teachers have had to ...” Commas are helpful in sentences because they separate clauses, making what is written easier to read. Imagine a comma as half a pause and a full stop as a full pause. Now read this sentence aloud, leaving half a pause where the comma is: “Above all this, means that many teachers have had to go “back to school” themselves...” It doesn't sound right, does it? Now read it aloud again, with the comma after "Above all" instead of "this". It should sound much better this time.

51. singular / plural

The problem here is the phrase: "there are a staggering amount of things to see ..." Although the author is talking about many things, the noun phrase ("staggering amount of things") starts with a singular article – "a". This is because the word "amount", which is the main noun here, is in singular form. It is "amount" rather than the plural "amounts". As a consequence, "there are ...", which uses a plural verb ("are" – from verb "to be") must be changed to "there is ...", using the singular verb "is". The phrase should read: "there is a staggering amount of things to see ..."

52. apostrophes

According to this advertisement there is going to be just one child with really active fingers this Christmas! The advert begins: "Get the kid's little fingers active this Christmas ...", using "kid" (which is singular) then the possessive apostrophe "s". The author implores us to get one kid's little fingers active, rather than many kids' little fingers. It's hard to believe that this is what they meant because it stands to reason that they would want to sell more than one funky farm activity set. If we change the noun "kid" to "kids" (plural form) and put the apostrophe after the plural form the sentence would be correct, and would read: "Get the kids' little fingers active this Christmas ..." With plural nouns like this it isn't necessary to use an "s" after the possessive apostrophe. Look at this example: "The car's wheels". If we changed the singular noun "car" to the plural "cars", we wouldn't need to write: "The cars's wheels" – simply "The cars' wheels" is enough.

53. spelling

The spelling mistake in this example comes near the end, in the sentence that begins: "I got the feeling that ..." The phrase "Lloyd and is trademark slapstick routines" should read "Lloyd and his trademark slapstick routines". The word "is" is a verb (from verb "to be") and is incorrect in this sentence because the possessive adjective "his" is required, to indicate the fact that the "trademark slapstick routines" belong to "Lloyd".

54. spelling

In this example the word "beleive" should be spelled "believe". I couldn't "believe" it myself when I saw that this cartoon had been published in a national newspaper and no one had spotted this mistake prior to publication. Or perhaps they had noticed it but deemed it unimportant and not worth correcting. We will never know.

55. articles

On the third line down it is necessary to change the article “A” to “An”, because the word that follows (“Easter”) begins with a vowel sound rather than a consonant sound. The sentence should read: “An Easter Message”.

56. apostrophes

This example is adapted from a large, colour advertisement which was printed in several different national newspapers for several weeks. Clearly no one involved with the advert minded that it used an incorrect punctuation mark before the word “Ello”. The word “Ello” was printed in very large type, in italics, which amplified the mistake by making it more noticeable. This word needs an apostrophe before it to indicate that it has been shortened – from the full greeting Hello to the more informal, or colloquial 'Ello. The author of this ad has used a single speech mark: ‘ (which has a tail that points to the right), instead of an apostrophe: ’ (which has a tail that points to the left). The sentence should read: 'Ello Jeff, rather than 'Ello Jeff. This mistake is similar to the one in example number 37 in that it was probably caused by a word-processing package working away on auto-pilot and not understanding that the author wanted to put an apostrophe before “Ello”, rather than a single speech mark. Alternatively, perhaps the well-paid advertising executives working away busily on this campaign don't know the difference between a single speech mark and an apostrophe. Or maybe they just wanted the company they were representing to look really unprofessional. We may never know!

57. spelling

The spelling mistake in this example can be found on the last line: “managment” should be spelled “management”. Since any spellchecker would have highlighted this error, it's hard to understand how it slipped through the net and ended up published in the final version of the advertisement.

58. apostrophes

In this example there is an apostrophe missing after “someone”. The sentence should read: “Drink someone's milkshake”. The “milkshake” belongs to “someone” – it is “someone's”. There is a possessive relationship between “milkshake” and “someone” which it is necessary to show by using the possessive apostrophe “s” after the person to whom it belongs – in this case, that person is “someone”.

59. doesn't make sense

There is a stray “everyone” in the third sentence of this piece of text. The third sentence should begin: “Everyone at People Power plays an enormously important role in helping ordinary people ...” This mistake may have been made when the author was editing the piece, although if they had spent just a few minutes checking their work carefully after creating it, rather than hastily publishing it, they would probably have spotted the unnecessary word. This newsletter would have been distributed to many different offices of the same national training company. Potentially several thousand employees would have received a copy. Whether they read it or not is another matter, but wouldn't it have been better to spend those extra few minutes checking for that stray “everyone”? We all make mistakes when producing written work. We make some because we are not sure how to use certain punctuation marks and others because we are unclear about a particular grammar rule. But we can all eliminate the majority of our mistakes – the “little mistakes”, like the one in this example – if we spend time learning about the kind of mistakes that we make and take just ten minutes to check what we've written – to proof-read our work – before we publish it and make it accessible for a wider audience.

60. spelling

The spelling mistake in this example comes in the last sentence, where the word “past” should be spelled “passed”. The words “past” and “passed” are homophones, which means that they sound the same but have different spellings and different meanings. “Past” can be used as an adjective, adverb, preposition or noun; for example, “the past” (i.e. yesterday, last week, etc.) is a noun (a thing). “Passed” should be used here as a past participle verb – it belongs to the present perfect verb phrase “Sales have passed ...” The sentence should read: “Sales of his latest release, Never Be Lonely (When You've Got A Friend), have now passed the 2 million mark in the UK alone.”

Grammar Words

A-Z of English Grammar Words

Adjectives are describing words. We use them to describe nouns (things). For example: the tall building / an interesting novel / a short conversation / a new year, etc.

An Adverbial Clause is part of a sentence which tells us how or when something happened. For example, “I woke up at seven o’clock”.

Adverbs describe the verb in a sentence – the action, how something is being done. For example, “Maria spoke loudly”. In this sentence, “spoke” is the verb/action and “loudly” describes how the verb/action was done.

The English alphabet has 26 letters. There are 5 vowels – a, e, i, o and u. The remaining 21 letters are called consonants – b, c, d, f, g, h, j, k, l, m, n, p, q, r, s, t, v, w, x, y and z.

There are three articles in the English language: “a” and “an” (indefinite articles) and “the” (definite article). We normally use an article before a common noun (an everyday object or thing). We use “a” and “an” when the noun is non-specific – e.g. “A school in Cambridge” – and we use “the” if we are talking about a particular thing, something that we are already aware we’re talking about – e.g. “The school in Cambridge”. We use “an” before words that start with a vowel sound and “a” before words that start with a consonant sound.

We use clauses to make sentences. There may be several clauses in one sentence. For example:

“The weather was nice, so we went for a picnic.”

In this sentence there are two clauses: the main clause (“The weather was nice”) and a subordinate clause (“so we went for a picnic”). The clauses are separated by a comma. A subordinate clause gives extra information about the main clause. A subordinate clause can’t be a separate sentence on its own, while a main clause can. A subordinate clause needs a main clause for it to make sense.

Conjunctions are words that link together clauses and phrases in a sentence. Words like: “and”, “because”, “but”, “or”, and “so”. For example: “I didn’t enjoy watching all the rubbish on television, so I gave away my set to a local school and cancelled my TV licence”.

Consonants are the 21 letters of the alphabet which are not vowels, namely: b, c, d, f, g, h, j, k, l, m, n, p, q, r, s, t, v, w, x, y, and z.

A consonant sound is the sound made by a word which begins with a consonant, for example: “cat”, “dog”, and “mouse”. This includes the “yuh” sound at the beginning of some words which start with the vowel “u”, like “university”, “union”, “uniform” and “unicycle”. This is why we say, “a university” and “a union” rather than “an university” and “an union”. Although these words begin with a vowel, they don’t begin with a vowel sound, so we have to use article “a” rather than “an”.

A contraction is the short form (or contracted form) of a verb. For example: “I’ll” is a contraction of “I will”, “She’d” is a contraction of “She had” and “Jeff’s” is a contraction of either “Jeff is” or “Jeff has”.

A determiner is a word that goes before a noun to give further information about that noun. For example, in the phrase “some eggs”, “some” is a determiner which matches the plural noun “eggs”. We know from the plural determiner “some” and the plural “s” at the end of “egg” that there is more than one “egg”. Other common determiners include: articles (“the egg”, “an egg”), possessive determiners (“my egg”, “her egg”), question words (“which eggs?”, “whose eggs?”) and quantity words (“many eggs”, “more eggs”).

An infinitive verb is the basic form of a verb. For example, “To go” is an infinitive verb, while “I go” (present simple tense), “I went” (past simple tense) and “I was going” (past continuous tense) are all ways of using the same basic form of the verb to show action happening at different times or in different tenses.

Inversion – which literally means reversal – is the word we use in English grammar to describe what happens to the word order of a sentence if we change it from a statement to a question. For example, this sentence is a statement: “Melinda is a qualified pilot”. To make this statement into a question we need to swap around the verb (“is”) and subject (“Melinda”), like this: “Is Melinda a qualified pilot?” We must also change the full stop of the statement into a question mark. It is helpful to remember inversion when writing statements and question forms. “He has ...” is inverted to become “Has he ...?” (question form), “You could...” is inverted to become “Could you ...?” (question form) and “They didn’t ...” is inverted to become “Didn’t they ...?” (question form), and so on.

its and it’s are often confused, perhaps because they sound the same. However, they have completely different meanings and functions within a sentence. “Its” is the possessive adjective which indicates that something belongs to “it”, for example: “The dog finished its dinner and went outside”. “It’s” is a contracted form of either verb to be (“it is”) or verb to have (“it has”). For example: “It’s a nice day, isn’t it?” (“It is a nice day, isn’t it?”) or “It’s been a nice day, hasn’t it?” (“It has been a nice day, hasn’t it?”).

A letter is one part of a word. There are 26 letters in the English alphabet, ranging from “a” to “z”. We normally need to use more than one letter to make a word, although the letter “I” on its own is a word (“I like you”) and so is the letter “a” (“I like you a lot”).

We use the term lower case to describe small letters. There are two cases in the English alphabet: lower case (small letters) and upper case (capital letters or big letters). We normally start a sentence with a capital letter, but then continue using only small letters, apart from for abbreviations (e.g. “ITV”) and for words which always start with a capital letter, like names of people, places and companies. These words are called proper nouns.

Nouns are things. There are lots of different kinds of nouns:

Common nouns are everyday things which we can see and touch (like “table”, “chair”, “coat” and “swimming pool”).

Proper nouns are words which always start with a capital letter, like the names of people, places, companies, days and months (for example: “Eric Morrison”, “Birmingham”, “The Forth Bridge”, “The Royal Shakespeare Company”, “Monday” and “February”).

Abstract nouns are things that we can’t see or touch but are there all the same. They describe things like feelings (“happiness” and “love”), qualities (“loyalty” and “weakness”) or concepts (“democracy” and “peace”).

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

Countable nouns (also known as “count nouns”) are things which have plural forms – i.e. they can be counted using numbers. For example: “one bag, two bags”, or “one mobile phone, two mobile phones”.

Uncountable nouns (also known as “noncount nouns”) are things which are not separate items and cannot be counted. We don’t know how many of them there are. For example: “bread”, “A slice of bread” or “Some bread” not “a bread” or “two breads”.

A paragraph is a chunk of text which is made up of several different sentences. If you are reading a novel there could be three paragraphs on one page with about four or five different sentences in each paragraph.

Phrases are parts of a sentence and are used to make clauses. They are made up of one or more words and there are different types, for example:

noun phrases – e.g. “fish and chips” verb phrases – e.g. “eats”, “is eating”, “has eaten”, “has been eating”

prepositional phrases – e.g. “in the kitchen”

We use the plural form of a noun when there is more than one of it. For example, if there is more than one “table” we use the plural form, which is “tables”. We can make the regular plural form of most nouns by adding “s” to the end of the word (e.g. one “bed” becomes two “beds”, and one “pen” becomes two “pens”). Some nouns have an irregular plural form, so we have to add different endings, like “es” (e.g. one “box” becomes two “boxes” and one “church” becomes two “churches”). For nouns that end in “y” we usually replace the “y” with “ies” (e.g. one “party” becomes two “parties” and one “strawberry” becomes two “strawberries”). There are a few other irregular plural endings, e.g. nouns ending in “f” have the plural ending “ves” (“loaf” becomes “loaves”), and there are some nouns that have their own unique plural form, e.g. one “child” becomes two “children” and one “mouse” becomes two “mice”.

We use possessive apostrophe “s” after a name and before a noun (a thing) to show that this thing belongs to the name. For example: “Julie’s schoolbook” (the “schoolbook belongs to “Julie”) and “Scunthorpe United’s loyal supporters” (the “loyal supporters” belong to “Scunthorpe United”).

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

A preposition is a word that describes where something is. For example, “in the kitchen”, “under the stairs”, “on the table” and “opposite the bank”.

Personal subject pronouns are words which go before a verb to replace nouns (the name of somebody or something). For example, instead of saying “Robbie said ...” you could use the personal subject pronoun “he” to make: “He said ...”, or instead of saying “The university library was closed” you could use the personal subject pronoun “it” to make: “It was closed”. We use these words in place of nouns when it is clear what or who you are talking about. The personal subject pronouns in English are: I, you, he, she, it, we, and they.

Possessive determiners – my, your, his, her, its, our and their – are words that give us information about who owns what, for example: “This is my banana and that’s your coconut”.

We use the different symbols called punctuation marks to make our writing easier to read. For example, without punctuation marks we wouldn’t know where one sentence finished and another began. Some of the most commonly used punctuation marks are:

- . full stop. We put a full stop at the end of each sentence, unless it is a question or needs an exclamation mark (e.g. “My uncle lives in Newfoundland.”). It is also used with abbreviations (e.g. “e.g.”).
- ’ apostrophe. We use an apostrophe before an “s” to show that something belongs to someone or something else (e.g. “Letitia’s stapler”) or to show that part of a word is missing, e.g. with contracted verb forms, like “It’s raining” (the apostrophe replaces the “i” of “is raining”) and “Paul’s gone home early” (the apostrophe replaces the “ha” of “has gone”).
- ? question mark. A question mark is used at the end of a question, instead of a full stop (e.g. “What time does the film start?”).
- ! exclamation mark. We put the exclamation mark at the end of a sentence which has a stronger emphasis than other sentences. It may be that the sentence is amusing (e.g. “My dog has no nose. How does he smell? Terrible!”) or insulting (e.g. “I’m sorry but your dog really does stink!”) or any sentence that conveys a strong emotion (e.g. “Oh no! Someone’s stolen my MP3 player!”).

“ ” speech marks. Speech marks go around part of a text which is spoken by someone. This is to make it stand out from the rest of the text. E.g.

The mechanic had a good look inside the bonnet and said, “There’s no hope, I’m afraid. You don’t need a mechanic, you need a miracle worker!” I tried to hide my disappointment. “OK”, I replied.

; semi-colon. A semi-colon is a short pause in a sentence. It is not as long a pause as a full stop, but it’s longer than a comma. For example, if you read the following piece of text out loud, you could count two beats for a full stop, one beat for a semi-colon and half a beat for a comma: “The boys started running, but they were soon out of breath; it wasn’t long before the gang caught up with them”.

: colon. A colon is similar to a semi-colon in that it helps to divide a sentence and provides a longer pause than a comma, but about half the pause of a full stop. It is used differently because it shows that the clause which comes after it follows on from the clause before it. For example, in the sentence: “The children opened their present: they couldn’t believe what they found!” the idea in the second clause (“they couldn’t believe ...”) follows on from the action in the first clause (“The children opened their present ...”). Using a colon is like saying, “There’s more to come in the next part of the sentence”. It provides a short pause in a sentence and points the way to a continuing thought or action.

() brackets. We can use brackets to slip extra information into a sentence, without disturbing the flow of the sentence too much. For example: “It had been John’s idea to invite Becky (who was secretly in love with him) to Heather’s birthday party”. Brackets are known as parentheses in American English.

- hyphen. We use a hyphen to join together two related words (for example: “post-Impressionism” and “south-west”) and to write numbers as words (for example “35” becomes “thirty-five”). It is also used at the end of a line to show that a word continues on the next line, e.g. “frequently”, and to indicate distances between times (“1914-1918”) and places (“London-Brighton”).

– dash. A dash is longer than a hyphen and has a different job. We use it to separate a particular clause from the rest of a sentence, for example: “We had been to Frankfurt four times – five if you count changing flights once on the way to Sydney – but had never spent New Year’s Eve there”. It is also used to indicate a pause or a change in the sentence’s train of thought, for example: “Roger took off his socks thoughtfully – it had been an extremely trying day”.

/ forward slash. We use the forward slash when writing the address of a page on the internet, for example:

A question form is used to make a sentence that asks a question, for example: “What time is it?” These sentences end with a question mark instead of a full stop. Question forms often begin with “wh-” question words, like “who”, “what”, “where”, “when”, “why”, “which” and “how”. “How” can be considered an honorary “wh-” question word because it contains both the letters “w” and “h”!

A sentence is a self-contained group of words which begins with a capital letter (“A”, “B”, “C”, etc.) and ends with a full stop (“.”), question mark (“?”) or exclamation mark (“!”). For example:

Derby County’s astonishing unbeaten run at home continued unabated.

We use the singular form of a noun when there is just one of it. For example, one “table” (“tables” would be the regular plural form) and one “tooth” (“teeth” is the irregular plural form).

Subject-Verb-Object is the phrase used to describe a common sentence structure in English. In the sentence: “The children are eating ice-creams”, “The children” is the subject, “are eating” is the verb form (the action – what the subject is doing) and “ice-creams” is the object (the thing that is having the action done to it).

We use the term upper case to describe capital letters (or big letters). We normally start a sentence with a capital letter, but then use small letters for the rest of the words, apart from abbreviations and words which always start with a capital letter, like names of people, places and companies.

Verbs are action words, or doing words. They tell us what somebody or something is doing in a sentence. For example, in the sentence “John washed his car”, “washed” is the verb, or action, John is the person doing the action (the subject), and “his car” is the thing that is having the action done to it (the object). Verbs can be regular and irregular. Most verbs are regular, which means that they all follow the same rules, for example when forming the past tense all regular verbs end with “ed” (“walk” becomes “walked” and “play” becomes “played”, and so on). However, some very common verbs are irregular, which means they don’t follow the same rules as regular verbs and you just have to learn their forms separately. Common irregular verbs are: “to be”, “to do”, “to have” and “to go”. These four verbs are also the most common auxiliary verbs. Auxiliary verbs are helping verbs: they help a main verb to form a verb phrase. In this sentence: “Ricky and Jessica are teaching their daughter to swim”, “are” is an auxiliary verb (from verb “to be”) which helps the main verb “teaching” (from verb “to teach”).

There are several different verb tenses in the English language. It is worth being aware of (or, better still, learning) some common verb tables in each of the following tenses: present simple, present continuous, present perfect, past simple, past continuous, past perfect and future forms (e.g. “going to”). For example, let’s look at the verb “to eat”, which is an irregular verb:

(Note: these verb tables do not cover negative and question forms for each tense, which can also be studied, e.g. “I eat / I don’t eat / Do I eat?” and so on.)

present simple tense verb table:

I eat, You eat, He eats, She eats, It eats, We eat, They eat present continuous tense verb table (with verb “to be” in the present tense as an auxiliary verb):

*I am eating, You are eating, He is eating, She is eating, It is eating,
We are eating, They are eating* present perfect tense verb table (with verb “to have” in the present tense as an auxiliary verb):

*I have eaten, You have eaten, He has eaten, She has eaten, It has eaten,
We have eaten, They have eaten*

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

past simple tense verb table:

I ate, You ate, He ate, She ate, It ate, We ate, They ate past continuous tense verb table (with verb “to be” in the past tense as an auxiliary verb):

I was eating, You were eating, He was eating, She was eating, It was eating, We were eating, They were eating past perfect tense verb table (with verb “to have” in the past tense as an auxiliary verb):

I had eaten, You had eaten, He had eaten, She had eaten, It had eaten, We had eaten, They had eaten future form with “going to” and verb “to be” in the present tense as an auxiliary verb:

I'm going to eat, You're going to eat, He's going to eat, She's going to eat, It's going to eat, We're going to eat, They're going to eat future form with “will” in the present tense as an auxiliary verb:

I will eat, You will eat, He will eat, She will eat, It will eat, We will eat, They will eat

There are 5 vowels in the English alphabet: a, e, i, o and u. The other 21 letters of the alphabet are called consonants.

A vowel sound is the sound made by a word which begins with a vowel, for example: “animal”, “education”, “India”, “orange” and “umbrella”.

A word is a part of a sentence made up of one or more letters. Words in a sentence are separated by a single space on either side. Several words with a capital letter at the beginning of the first one and a full stop after the last one together form a sentence.

This book is not intended to be a fully comprehensive guide to English grammar. There are plenty of those around already, at prices which anyone can afford. This is a practice book which aims to develop and nurture an interest in using written English correctly by explaining where and why professional editors and copywriters working today have made mistakes in public. For useful and readable guides to English grammar you could try any of the following:

Title: An A-Z of English Grammar and Usage
Author: Geoffrey Leech
Publisher: Nelson, 1990
ISBN No.: 0175560218

Title: The Oxford Style Manual
Author: R. M. Ritter (Editor)
Publisher: Oxford University Press, 2002
ISBN No.: 0198605641

Title: Elementary Grammar in Use (With Answers)
Author: Raymond Murphy
Publisher: Cambridge University Press, 2002
ISBN No.: 0521529328

Of course, it is essential that anyone writing for an audience has a clear and modern dictionary. It doesn't have to be one that's so comprehensive that you need to cart it around in a wheelbarrow, but it shouldn't be a small pocket dictionary either. The Concise Oxford Dictionary is one that we recommend:

Title: The Concise Oxford English Dictionary – Eleventh Edition
Author: Fowler, Fowler & Pearsall (Editors)
Publisher: Oxford University Press, 2004

It could be a problem with apostrophes or a missing article, or maybe it just doesn't make sense. It could be there's a punctuation mark missing or a spelling mistake, or perhaps the words used don't agree – the verb is singular but the noun is plural ...

What do you think? Not sure? You need this book!

Inside you will find 60 examples of incorrect English, including the one above, adapted from genuine mistakes published in newspaper and magazine articles, advertisements, websites, and leaflets. Each example has one mistake. Your task is to find it and say what kind of mistake it is – then write the corrected version. In the process you will improve your written English by learning to identify the common mistakes that professional writers make and that professional editors and proof-readers miss.

We all need to write to communicate with others. This book shows you how to improve your written English by avoiding the mistakes that the professionals make.

Talk a Lot

Introduction

Welcome to a new kind of English course!

Talk a Lot is a great new way to learn spoken English, and quite a departure from the standard ELT course book. Instead of spending hours reading and writing, students have the opportunity to engage in challenging and fun speaking and listening activities with their friends.

On this course students learn how to think in English as well as Talk a Lot!

The Talk a Lot course objectives are very simple:

- Every student talking in English
- Every student listening to and understanding English
- Every student thinking in English, and
- Every student taking part in class

Talk a Lot is structured so that every student can practise and improve English grammar, vocabulary, pronunciation, intonation, word and sentence stress, and interpersonal skills, by working in pairs, groups and one to one with the teacher.

The main benefits of Talk a Lot are:

- Students have to think in English during lessons in a controlled and focused way
- Students learn how to memorise correct English structures naturally, without abstract and unrelated grammar lessons
- Students learn how to construct eight different common verb forms, using positive, negative and question forms, as well as embedded grammar appropriate to their level. The verb forms studied are: Present Simple, Present Continuous, Past Simple, Past Continuous, Present Perfect, Modal Verbs, Future Forms, and First Conditional
- Students learn 400+ essential vocabulary words by heart
- Students enjoy following a simple and effective method that produces results quickly

The ten lesson topics studied in Talk a Lot Elementary Book 1 are: Town, Food, Shopping, Health, Transport, Clothes, Work, Family, Home, and Free Time.

Thanks to all of our students who have been trialling this course in recent months. Remember, teachers can download and print all the blank forms that are necessary for running an English course, such as blank registers and enrolment forms, individual learning plans, and initial assessments, all for free, from our website at www.englishbanana.com.

We'd love to hear from you about how you have used this book and how your course went, so please feel free to contact us via our website feedback form or by emailing info@englishbanana.com. We'd also be really excited to hear about your ideas and proposals for new Talk a Lot topics and activities that we can use in future Talk a Lot books.

With best wishes for a successful course,

Matt Purland, Ostróda, Poland (6th April 2008)

How to Use this Course

Talk a Lot

How to Use this Course

Course Outline:

- Before the course begins perform an initial assessment with each student to check that they are at a suitable level for the course, and then enrol them onto the course. This course is aimed at students who are at a good elementary level or pre-intermediate level. For this course we recommend that there are no more than ten students per class.
- The course is divided into twelve three-hour lessons. The first ten lessons each have a different topic; while lesson 11 is intended for the revision of material studied over the ten weeks, and lesson 12 is reserved for the students' examinations and an end of course review. We recommend that you hold one lesson per week, making this a twelve week course comprising 30 guided learning hours, plus 6 hours of guided revision and examination. It's up to you what order you do the lessons in; you don't have to follow our order of topics!
- If your students need more than three hours of study per week, why not offer them two 3-hour lessons per week: one Talk a Lot lesson, as described below, and one lesson using traditional teaching methods, which include conventional reading, writing and grammar-based activities that could complement the intensive speaking and listening work of the Talk a Lot lessons. You could follow a standard EFL or ESL course book such as New English File or New Headway, using material that complements the Talk a Lot lesson, so that in Week 2, for example, both 3-hour lessons are on the subject of Food and Drink. This would then give you a course with 60 guided learning hours.
- The lesson topics are:

Lesson 1	Town
Lesson 2	Food
Lesson 3	Shopping
Lesson 4	Health
Lesson 5	Transport
Lesson 6	Clothes
Lesson 7	Work
Lesson 8	Family
Lesson 9	Home
Lesson 10	Free Time
Lesson 11	Revision
Lesson 12	Exam & End of Course Review

Lesson Outline

- In our lesson outline, each lesson lasts for three hours (180 teaching minutes). This can vary according to your needs, for example, in some English language classrooms one teaching hour is equal to 45 minutes, and so 3 teaching hours would be 2¼ hours. Or it may be that you have only 2 hours per week with your group of students. You can still use Talk a Lot activities to serve up a satisfying and stimulating lesson – just in a shorter timeframe.

Talk a Lot

How to Use this Course

- Each lesson focuses on a specific vocabulary topic, for example “Town”. For each lesson the teacher can draw from seven different activities:

Sentence Blocks
Discussion Questions
Role Plays
Discussion Words
Vocabulary Test
Lesson Test
Show & Tell

It is not necessary to use every activity in every lesson. We believe that there is more material in this book for each lesson than is needed to fill 3 hours, so the teacher can mix and match, using different activities in different lessons. Similarly, it is not necessary to do the activities in the same order (as given below) in every lesson, but mix things up each time so that students don't become used to a set lesson order.

- Bearing that in mind, here is an example of how you could structure a 3-hour long Talk a Lot lesson:

- 15 mins Welcome and vocabulary test (see page 5) based on the previous lesson's topic. The teacher reads out the twenty words to the students in their native language and they write them in English. The teacher gives back lesson tests, discusses the answers with the students, and can also ask random questions from the previous lesson's sentence blocks to check how much the students have remembered.
- 15 mins The teacher introduces the topic of this lesson, for example, “Home”. Each student has to show and tell an item to do with this topic, e.g. for “Home” a student could bring a utility bill, or a cushion from their favourite chair, and then tell the class about it. The teacher also brings something to “show and tell”, and then introduces the eight new sentence block starting sentences and wh- questions on the board or on the handout (see page 8). It is essential that the teacher checks that the students understand the sentences, so that they are meaningful to students when they practise them later on.
- The teacher asks different students to model one or two of the sentence blocks, which will act as a reminder to students of how to make the sentence blocks.
- 20 mins Students make the sentence blocks in pairs, for example, sitting back to back without eye contact. They don't write anything down and must not copy the sentence block starting sentences from the board. For this activity all the talk flows from the students making the sentence blocks from the starting sentences and wh- questions on the board or on the handout.
- 10 mins Next, the teacher introduces the eight discussion questions for this lesson to the whole class (see page 13). Again, it is important that the teacher checks that their students understand the vocabulary that is used. Students should be encouraged to use their dictionaries to check new words.

How to Use this Course

30 mins Working in pairs or small groups, students practise the discussion questions. This is free speaking practise – the antithesis of having to make pre-set sentences using the sentence blocks. The students can change partners several times in order to get a good variety of practice, then the whole class comes together and feeds back to the group, with the teacher asking additional follow-up questions. During this time the teacher removes the sentence block sentences from the board, or asks the students to return their sentence block handouts.

We're halfway through! Have a cup of tea and some fresh air – or just hang out!

25 mins After a relaxing break it's time for some brain work – the lesson test (see page 5)! The aim of this test is for the teacher to find out what vocabulary the students can remember from the previous lesson and to get an idea of how well they are coping with making the sentence blocks.

25 mins The teacher could decide to use this slot for activities with the discussion words (see page 15) or for making role plays (see page 14) – or for both, if your students are up to the challenge!

30 mins The students practise the sentence block sentences again, but this time without any written record – nothing on the board and no handout. The teacher monitors each pair and helps them where necessary, making sure that they are making the sentence blocks successfully. Towards the end of this time the whole class comes back together to give each other feedback. The teacher asks questions from the eight sentence blocks to different students, who should give a correct, or nearly correct, sentence – all from memory. In the early weeks this will be more difficult for the students, but after a few lessons with this method students should be able to answer confidently, having memorised some or all of that lesson's sentence blocks.

10 mins Open question time – students can ask any English-related question. The teacher looks at the students' workbooks (this can be any suitable course book that students work through at home and which complements the lesson) and checks students' progress. The teacher sets the topic for the next lesson and gives out the handouts for the next lesson's vocabulary test. The teacher could either give or spend a few minutes eliciting the twenty new words in the students' first language. The teacher should encourage students to keep all of their handouts in their own file, for revision and further study at home.

Assessment Methods, Tests and Examination

The overall course mark for each student is reached by continuous assessment and an end of course oral examination. Individual students are monitored throughout the course and their progress recorded in a number of different ways. The aim of using continuous assessment is to encourage students to work hard in every lesson – because every lesson counts and effort is rewarded along with accuracy – and to work hard at home, e.g. learning the vocabulary words each week.

Each student gets a combined mark out of 80 for each lesson which is based on the following:

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

Talk a Lot

How to Use this Course

- vocabulary test: maximum of 20 marks
- lesson test: maximum of 40 marks
- student's lesson mark – accuracy: maximum of 10 marks
- student's lesson mark – effort: maximum of 10 marks

- total lesson mark: maximum of 80 marks

The lesson marks are added together on the individual Student Course Reports as the course progresses. Students don't have access to their lesson marks as they are added together, but they do see their marks for the vocabulary and lesson tests, as well as getting feedback on these tests and on their general performance each week.

Teachers should award marks out of 10 to each student for every lesson based on the level of their achievement during the lesson (accuracy) and their commitment during the lesson (effort). It goes without saying that teachers should strive to be wholly objective and not give in to favouritism when awarding these marks.

Over the ten lessons all of the lesson marks are added together to give an individual total for each student, to which is added the score from their final exam. This gives each student a grade for the whole course, ranging from A to U (ungraded fail):

- maximum lesson mark of $80 \times 10 = 800$ marks +
- maximum final exam mark of 100 =
- maximum course mark of 900 marks

Grade system:

Grade A = 800-900 marks	First Class
Grade B = 650-800 marks	Very Good
Grade C = 550-650 marks	Good
Grade D = 400-550 marks	Fair Pass
Grade E = 250-400 marks	Pass
Grade U = less than 250 marks	Fail

Grades A-E are passes. Grade U is ungraded and means that the student has failed the course. The student's grade is recorded on their course certificate, for example:

"Grade: A"

"Achievement: First Class"

You could use one of the course certificate templates at the back of this book (see pages 110-111), or create your own.

Lesson Assessment

During pair and group work the teacher monitors the students, checking and correcting grammar and vocabulary where necessary, e.g. during discussion question and role play practice. In all such “free practice” work the teacher should keep referring students back to the grammar that is being learned by making the sentence blocks, for example if a student says: “What you want?”, remind them that: “You must have a verb after a wh- question.” In this way the free practice work will help to consolidate what is being learned from the more structured practice of forming the sentence blocks.

Written homework based on the topics and activities from each lesson could be given, checked and marked by the teacher. However, written work must be kept to a minimum during the lesson and students should not to write out full sentence blocks. This is Talk a Lot, after all! The students may instinctively begin to write down the starting sentences from the board, or make notes about the sentence blocks, but discourage this because it is a waste of lesson time in which they have a valuable opportunity to talk in English. The Talk a Lot method encourages students to use their memories as a learning tool and to activate the grammar that they already know before they join the course. When a student writes down the sentence blocks, they give full permission to their memory to forget this information, since they know it is safely recorded somewhere. Without the safety net of pen and paper students have to challenge themselves to work harder to make the sentence blocks (which are, after all, simply question forms and answers, based around individual verb forms). The time for writing out sentence blocks is at home, where students can write to their hearts’ content! They also get a chance to see full sentence blocks in written form when they do the lesson test – once per lesson. As we have seen, the Talk a Lot certificate is based on marks gained during continuous assessment along with a final oral exam at the end of the course. Lesson assessment also includes more formal testing with regular vocabulary tests and lesson tests, the marks from which are added to each student’s running total of marks. The teacher keeps track of each student’s progress by adding the results of their tests and other marks to their individual Student Course Report (see page 17).

Vocabulary Tests

All Talk a Lot tests should be run in exam conditions, with folders and dictionaries closed, no talking, and no copying. The vocabulary test could be held near the beginning of the lesson, as a way of quietening students down and getting them into study mode. We recommend that the teacher runs the vocabulary and lesson tests in the same positions during the lessons each time so as to give a sense of structure and routine to the tests which can be reassuring for students. Teachers should try to mark the vocabulary test during the lesson break and give students their results in the same lesson. The teacher keeps a record of the students’ scores on their Student Course Reports and measures progress made, as well as spending time during and between lessons addressing issues with individual students.

Lesson Tests

The primary aim of the regular lesson test is to consolidate the work done in the previous lesson. If you run this test immediately after the break it will help to settle students down and get their minds focused again on learning English. Set a time limit of no more than 25 minutes and stick to it. As with the vocabulary tests, the aim of the lesson test is to check students’ progress and both identify weaker students who may need extra support, e.g. help with making the sentence blocks, and identify stronger students who may need a greater challenge during lessons. For example, to maximise the effect of pair work the teacher could pair a stronger student with a weaker student.

Lesson tests are marked by the teacher after the lesson and the results given to students at the beginning of the next lesson, when there is time for a brief discussion of incorrect answers and other points raised by the test. The results from both tests enable the teacher to see not only who is paying attention during lessons, e.g. when making the sentence blocks, but also who is working at home: learning the vocabulary words, both meanings and spellings, and writing out sentence blocks.

At their discretion, a teacher may allow students who have missed a lesson to catch up on course marks by taking both tests at another time, e.g. after the present lesson. Or the teacher may decide that the student has missed the lesson and so cannot catch up on the marks, a scenario that will affect their final course score. However, if the latter applies the teacher should give the student in question the material to study at home in their own time.

Verb Forms Practice

These pages can be introduced by the teacher as extra worksheets at any time during the course if students are having problems with sentence blocks based on a particular verb form, or if they need more focused verb forms practice. A follow up activity would be for students to imagine their own sentence blocks based on particular verb forms, e.g. the teacher asks students to work in pairs and make four new sentence blocks using present perfect form – orally, without writing anything down.

In general, it's better for students to use a variety of different verb forms in a normal lesson, rather than studying a different verb form each lesson, because if a student misses one lesson they won't have missed out on studying a complete verb form.

End of Course Oral Examination

General Notes on the Examination:

The Talk a Lot end of course exam is a one to one oral examination with the teacher reading the questions and the student answering. The exam should last for a maximum of 20 minutes. The exam is recorded onto tape and marked by the teacher. The results are added to the student's individual Student Course Report and their overall course score and final grade can be calculated, which are then added to the student's certificate.

At no time should the student see the examination paper, whether before, during or after the examination. Nor should the student write down anything during the exam. The teacher writes the starting sentence and question word (printed in bold) on the board for each sentence block question.

The examination questions are taken randomly from the course work studied and include material from every topic covered during the course. During the examination the teacher should not prompt the student for answers or help them in any way, apart from to explain the instructions so that the student understands what they have to do. Students may not use a dictionary during this examination.

At the end of the course the teacher could give a prize to the student (or students) with:

- the best course score overall
- the best vocabulary test grades overall

Marking Guide:

There are four kinds of question that form the examination:

1. Make sentence blocks (questions 1, 5, 9, and 13)

The maximum score is 8 marks. Students score one mark for each fully correct line, with correct intonation and sentence stress, and one mark for naming the correct verb form. Students get only half a mark if the intonation and/or sentence stress of a line is incorrect. In the last two lines of each sentence block the answers will vary as students have to change part of the original information to produce a negative answer. Accept any answer that is grammatically correct and makes sense within the given context.

Don't penalise students for making contractions, or not making them. For example, if the answer on the examination paper says "No, he doesn't", but the student says "No, he does not", don't mark them down. It is still an accurate answer.

2. Answer discussion questions (questions 3, 6, 11 and 14)

Students can score up to a maximum of 4 points for each question based on the following criteria:

The student should answer the question and speak for approximately 1 minute:

- | | |
|----------|--|
| 4 marks: | the student produces sentences which are completely or almost completely correct in terms of grammar, pronunciation, intonation, and sentence stress. There are between 0-2 errors. Excellent use of vocabulary and interesting subject matter |
| 3 marks: | the student produces sentences which are good in terms of grammar, pronunciation, intonation, and sentence stress, but there are between 3-4 errors. Good use of vocabulary |
| 2 marks: | the student produces sentences which can be understood in terms of grammar, pronunciation, intonation, and sentence stress, but there are many errors |
| 1 mark: | the student attempts to answer the question, but not using full sentences nor correct grammar, pronunciation, intonation, and sentence stress. Part of their answer can be clearly understood, but there are many errors |
| 0 marks: | the student has not attempted the question or the answer is incoherent |

The teacher should make a note in the box provided of several examples of the student's performance, including errors as well as correct structures.

3. State ten vocabulary words on a given topic (questions 2, 7, 12 and 15)

When students have to list ten vocabulary words, the teacher could keep a tally in the box provided, e.g. -III IIII ... Give a half mark in the event of wrong word stress or incorrect intonation and/or pronunciation. When stating ten different vocabulary words the student cannot include the example word which is given in the question.

4. Answer discussion word questions (questions 4, 8, 10 and 16)

The answers and marks for these questions are provided on the examination paper. Give a half mark in the event of wrong word stress or incorrect intonation and/or pronunciation.

Sentence Blocks

Designed specifically for the Talk a Lot course, the sentence block method is a brand new way to teach English grammar with speaking practice. The main benefit of this method is that the students have to do all of the work. They must listen, think hard, and remember. They must produce eight sentences, both positive and negative, using a given verb form, and two different question forms, using wh- questions and questions with auxiliary verbs. They must produce the eight sentences based on a given starting sentence and a given wh- question word, using a pre-agreed set of rules. When they are working on the sentence blocks students are speaking and memorising correct English. They are learning to use key verb forms in English, forming questions and responses organically as they focus all their attention on making the sentence blocks successfully. They are also learning new vocabulary and have to produce their own ideas to make the last two negative sentences work.

So what is a sentence block and how do you make one? A sentence block is a group of eight consecutive sentences, made up of seven lines, that forms a two-way conversation. There are strict rules governing how a sentence block must be made, which students should learn.

At the beginning of the course:

The students receive two handouts explaining the basic terminology used when talking about sentence blocks and some helpful rules for making them (see pages 18 and 19). The teacher should spend time discussing these pages with the students, in particular explaining:

- When we use each of the eight verb forms that are explored during the course
- What we mean by subject-verb “inversion”
- How auxiliary verbs are used, and the rule for using “do” as an auxiliary verb

In the first lesson or two the teacher will need to train the students to make the seven lines that form a sentence block. In the ensuing lessons students should be able to form the sentence blocks themselves, based on the given sentences on the board or handout. It is very important that in each lesson the teacher ensures that students understand the vocabulary used in the sentence blocks before they are let loose on the task of making them.

This is an example of how an individual student could be coached to form a sentence block for the first time. When coaching groups, ask a different student for each of the lines.

The teacher has written the first starting sentence on the board; for example, this one from the “Shopping” lesson:

I used my debit card to buy a pair of shoes for work.

The teacher:

OK, we're going to make a sentence block. There are seven lines in a sentence block and eight different sentences. [Pointing to the board at the starting sentence.] This is the first line. Can you read it for me, please? [The student reads it out loud.] Do you understand this sentence?

The student:

Yes.

The teacher:

OK. [Writes "What" underneath the starting sentence.] To make the second line can you ask a "what" question based on the starting sentence?

The student:

What did you use to buy a pair of shoes for work?

The teacher:

Good. Very good. Excellent.

Note: if a student has a problem producing any part of the sentence block, the teacher should prompt them with the first word, then the next, and in this way "coax" the sentence out of them by, if necessary, saying the whole sentence and getting the student to say it with them, then to repeat it without the teacher's help.

The teacher:

And what is the short answer?

The student:

My debit card.

The teacher:

OK. Great.

Note: it is very important that the teacher praises the student as they get sentences right and gently encourages them when they have taken a wrong turn. It is also important for the teacher to keep the momentum going so that the sentence block is made with a sense of rhythm and an almost urgent pace. This will keep the student focused and thinking about the task in hand.

The teacher:

So now we've got three lines. Can you repeat them for me? [The student does so correctly.] Now, let's get to five lines. Ask a question with inversion.

The student:

Did you use your debit card to buy a pair of shoes for work?

The teacher:

Good. And the short answer?

The student:

Yes.

The teacher:
Yes, what?

The student:
Yes, I did.

The teacher:
Good. Very good. So now we've got five lines. We're almost there. Can you repeat the five lines, please? [The student does so correctly.] OK, so, to complete the sentence block, let's ask the same kind of question with inversion but this time to get a negative answer. Look at the question word. Focus on the "what". Change the "what" to get a negative answer.

The student:
Did you use cash to buy a pair of shoes for work?

The teacher:
And give a short answer in the negative.

The student:
No, I didn't.

The teacher:
Then a full negative answer. The last line is made up of two negative sentences.

The student:
I didn't use cash to buy a pair of shoes for work.

Note: students have to invent something here ("Did you use cash...?") that makes sense in the same context. They should try to think of a sensible option to get a negative answer. For example, the teacher must not accept: "Did you use a car to buy a pair of shoes for work?" because it doesn't make sense. Students often struggle to remember to make two negative sentences for the last line. Encourage them and stress the two negative sentences.

The teacher:
Excellent! Now tell me all seven lines...

Throughout, the teacher should help the student to achieve the correct pronunciation, word and sentence stress (see page 134), rhythm and intonation. If a student makes a mistake during a line, ask them to repeat the whole line again. Of course, in the example above the student has given almost all of the correct answers straight away. This is purely to serve a purpose in this guide – to give a clear example of what the students should aim for. The teacher should also encourage the students to think about word and sentence stress and to emphasise the correct words in each sentence, for example:

Did you use your debit card to buy a pair of shoes for work?

Yes, I did.

Did you use cash to buy a pair of shoes for work?

No, I didn't. I didn't use cash to buy a pair of shoes for work.

How to Use this Course

Students may have a tendency to try to say all seven lines with a questioning intonation at the end of each line. For example, they might say:

The student:

Did you use cash to buy a pair of shoes for work? No I didn't?

Ask them to think about the meaning of what they are saying and to make definite statements without the questioning intonation. Some students may try to gabble and deliver their lines very quickly without apparent thought of what they mean – wholly focused on their goal of remembering each line and forming the sentence blocks as quickly as possible. Ask them to slow down and to focus on what each sentence means.

So, in the example above the seven lines and eight sentences of the sentence block are:

1. I used my debit card to buy a pair of shoes for work. (starting sentence)
2. What did you use to buy a pair of shoes for work? (wh- question)
3. My debit card. (short answer)
4. Did you use your debit card to buy a pair of shoes for work? (question with inversion)
5. Yes, I did. (short answer)
6. Did you use cash to buy a pair of shoes for work? (question with inversion to get a negative answer)
7. No, I didn't. I didn't use cash to buy a pair of shoes for work. (two sentences – a short negative answer and a long negative answer)

The teacher should ensure that the students follow the sentence block structure and that they recap each group of sentences after the 3rd and 5th lines. If a student has a tendency to “Um...” and “Er...” their way through each line, challenge them to say the lines without doing this. As they monitor the pairs engaged in making the sentence blocks – saying one line each – the teacher will sometimes need to be firm with the students, and ask them to keep focused when it looks as though their minds are beginning to wander, and of course the teacher also needs to keep focused! For example, when leading sentence block practice at the front of the class, the teacher will need to be one step ahead of the students and know the next sentence in their mind – what they want the student to produce – before the student produces it.

Embedded Grammar:

In each lesson students will practise making positive sentences, negative sentences and question forms using the following verb forms:

- present simple
- present continuous
- past simple
- past continuous
- present perfect
- modal verbs (e.g. can, should, must, have to, etc.)
- future forms (with “will” and “going to”)

- first conditional

While doing sentence block practice the students may be unaware that they are using eight different verb forms. It is better not to focus on this and blow their minds with grammar, but instead make sure that the students are making the sentence blocks correctly. For example, it is essential that students understand the eight starting sentences on the board or handout at the beginning of the lesson, and also know how to make a sentence block, before they begin pair work with a partner.

The starting sentences all contain embedded grammar, which means grammar that occurs as a natural part of the sentence block as it is being spoken and automatically memorised, rather than grammar that is explicitly presented to students as an isolated grammar topic, such as: “In today’s lesson we are going to study wh- questions...” etc. The embedded grammar in the sentence blocks at Elementary level includes:

- positive and negative forms
- use of articles
- use of auxiliary verbs
- a variety of main verbs in each unit
- subject and object pronouns
- yes/no questions
- wh- questions
- active and passive sentences
- punctuation marks
- prepositions of place and time
- some/any
- singular/plural
- nouns: common, proper, abstract, countable, uncountable, etc.
- intensifiers – too, really, very, completely, etc.
- use of infinitives
- adjectives
- adverbs of frequency and manner
- possessive pronouns
- determiners – this, that, those, these, etc.
- there is/there are
- formal and informal situations
- use of gerunds
- comparatives and superlatives
- relative clauses – that, which, who, where, etc.

The teacher could pick up on any or all of these grammar topics in more detail if they run the course as a 60-hour course (see page 1).

Miscellaneous Notes:

- As well as with students in groups and pairs, this method can also be used successfully with students on a one to one basis, with the teacher prompting the student to produce the sentence blocks, first with the sentences on the board or handout, and later from memory.

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

Talk a Lot

How to Use this Course

- Teachers (or students) can also imagine their own starting sentences based on the verb form or vocabulary that they wish to practise.

Different Ways to Practice Forming Sentence Blocks:

- In a circle – the teacher or a student leads and chooses each student in turn to form the complete sentence block.
- The students sit back to back in pairs and say one line each, then reverse who starts.
- The students chant a complete sentence block altogether as a group.
- The students say one line or one word each, going around the group in a circle.
- The teacher says a random line from a sentence block and asks a student to produce the next line.

Note: every sentence block can be said or chanted in a continuous way by adding an eighth line at the end that begins with “So...” and continues with the question on line 2. For example:

Line 1: Peter walks two kilometres to his office every day.

Line 2: Who walks... [etc.]

Line 7: No, he doesn't. Jeff doesn't walk two kilometres to his office every day.

Line 8: So, who walks... [then, continuing with line 3, “Peter does.” and so on]

Discussion Questions

Students work in pairs with student A asking student B the first question, then student B asking student A the same question, before moving on to the next question. After between 5-10 minutes the students change partners and repeat the process with a different student. Where there are empty boxes on the handout – for example questions 1, 3, 4, and 6 on the Town Discussion Questions handout – the students should write down their partners' answers. This is partly to encourage the students to focus on the task in hand, and partly so that the teacher, who should be monitoring all the pairs, can see written evidence that the questions are being asked and answered. Before the students move off to work in pairs the teacher should look at the handout with the whole group and ensure that everybody understands the task and vocabulary used in the questions before they begin. For example the teacher could pre-teach some of the more difficult words and there could be a dictionary race to see which student finds each word the fastest.

Extension activity: pairs that have finished the activity early could think up their own new discussion questions based on the same topic, or the teacher could prepare additional questions for the students.

At the end of the activity the whole group comes back together for group feedback, where the teacher chooses a student to read a question and tell the class both their own answer and their partner's answer. The teacher should highlight errors that have occurred and elicit the answers from the group. Interesting structures could be explored in more detail on the board.

Assessment:

This activity is assessed by the teacher checking and correcting students as they monitor each pair, listening in and making comments where necessary, e.g. challenging incorrect question forms, and writing down notes for later exposition on the board during the group feedback period. The students' achievement in this activity is recorded as part of their overall lesson score (for accuracy and effort) by the teacher at the end of the lesson.

Role Plays

Students work in pairs or groups of three to develop and rehearse a short role play with three scenes, based on the information given to them on the handout, which is then performed to the rest of the class. They have to include the title of the outline somewhere in their role play, e.g. Family role play 1: "You did that on purpose!" The role play can be fully acted out, with props and costumes, or be simply a dialogue, but students shouldn't be writing during this activity. Writing can be done at home. In the Talk a Lot classroom the focus should be mainly on spoken English. As with the discussion questions activity the teacher should ensure that students understand what they have to do and are confident with the vocabulary used on the role play handout before they begin. The teacher should insist that each group produces three different, distinct scenes, teaching them to think of the role play as three parts of a whole, with a through-line and a logical progression through the scenes, for example:

- Scene 1: Setting up the situation
- Scene 2: Action
- Scene 3: Result

To make this task more challenging, you could agree as a group that all role plays have to include certain things, as well as what is in the outline, for example:

- a) a person's name
- b) a place name
- c) an object (e.g. an aubergine or a giraffe's toothbrush)
- d) a certain phrase
- e) a prop
- f) a costume

The teacher could provide a costume box and a prop box in the classroom with plenty of dressing up clothes or objects for students to use in their role plays.

If your students particularly enjoy doing role plays, they could try the role play extensions (see pages 54-56) in addition to the role play outlines on the handouts, but role play must be only one element of a Talk a Lot lesson. Make sure that in each lesson there is a balance of activities, for example: tests, sentence block building, discussion questions, role plays, etc.

It's fine when students want to veer away from the outlines given on the handouts. The aim of the activity is for the students to put the flesh on the bare bones of the outlines. For example, they should suggest character names, place names, names of businesses, and so on. The suggested outlines are only there to get ideas flowing. The teacher could suggest new situations for role plays or more imaginative groups of students could think up new role plays of their own, but based on the same lesson topic.

The Mood Chart:

Use the mood chart on page 57 to add an extra dimension to the role plays. Print the page onto card, cut up the cards and put them into a bag. Each student picks one card – one mood – and they have to act out their role play using this mood exclusively. When watching each role play the audience have to guess which moods the actors have picked. In another variation, the audience pick the moods that they want to see used in a role play, or all the groups have to rehearse the same role play using different moods, and the audience have to guess the moods.

Assessment:

As with the discussion questions activity this activity is mainly assessed by the teacher checking and correcting students as they monitor the groups, listening for errors that could be dissected later on in a group feedback session, and correcting grammar in line with the work being done on forming sentence blocks. Again, the students' achievement in this activity is recorded as part of their overall lesson score (for accuracy and effort) by the teacher when they sit down and write each student's course report.

Because this activity is drama-based, the audience could make their opinion heard too, giving marks out of ten for each role play based on:

- a) language accuracy
- b) effort
- c) imagination
- d) best costumes, use of props, lighting, sound, etc.

Or they could give thumbs up (1 or 2) or thumbs down (1 or 2). The audience feedback is just for fun and not recorded on each student's course report.

Discussion Words and Question Sheets

It's amazing how much you can do with forty cut-out vocabulary words! We have outlined many activities for using these words with students on the discussion words question sheets. First of all, print a discussion words page onto thin card and cut up the cards with scissors. If possible you could laminate them to make them extra sturdy.

The main activity goes as follows: sit down with the whole class around a large table and lay out all of the cards face down. Students take a number of cards each. The number they take depends on the number of students in the class and for how long the teacher wants the activity to last, e.g. for a ten minute activity ten students could each take two cards.

Go around the group one student at a time. Each student picks up a card and has to describe the word in English without saying it. The other students have to guess the word. The students could use dictionaries to find new words that they don't know. It's possible for students to make this activity deliberately harder for their peers by giving a more cryptic description!

Using the Question Sheets:

The teacher reads the questions out loud in a random order. Or one or more of the students could read the questions out. The teacher should use as many of the questions as is necessary to fill the time that they have allotted to this activity. For example, if you have 25 minutes for this activity it's unlikely that you will need to use the main activity as described above as well as all of the questions on the handout. As with the Talk a Lot course in general, there is more material here than will probably be needed; but as all teachers know, it's better to have too much material planned for a lesson than not enough!

Extension Activities:

- The students work on the main activity with the words in pairs or small groups.
- The students have to think of ten, twenty, thirty or forty additional words on the same topic, e.g. Home, and make their own discussion words cards.
- The teacher or the students invent new questions based on the original/new words.
- Have a game of vocabulary bingo. Each student writes down fifteen words from the forty words in three lines: five on the top, five on the middle and five on the bottom. The teacher reads out words from the group at random. The students cross out the words they have written down when they hear the teacher say them. The students race to see who can cross off the first line, then two lines, then all the words.
- “Yes/No” questions: one student takes a card with a word on it, keeping it secret from the others, who have to ask “Yes/No” questions in order to find out what the word is. The first student can only answer “Yes” or “No”. For example, for food and drink words the other students could ask: “Is it a vegetable?”, “Is it green?”, “Does it grow in a field?”, etc. until they are able to guess the identity of the word. This is a great activity to get students making questions with inversion.
- The students match the phonetic and English spellings of different words (see page 142), translate words into/from the IPA, or group words by the sounds they contain.
- A student mimes different words without talking, while the others have to guess them.
- Word association activities:
 - a) the teacher (or a student) chooses a word and each student has to say six words that they associate with this word, or each student in the group has to say one word. For example, if the word is “car” the students could say “wheel”, “engine”, “driver”, “gears”, “Ford”, “garage”, and so on.
 - b) the teacher (or a student) chooses a word and the first student says the first word that comes into their head, followed by the next student and the next in a kind of word association chain. See how long your group can go for without running out of steam. You may be surprised where you end up! For example: “supermarket” > “shopping” > “centre” > “middle” > “school” > “work” > “job”, and so on.
- Make any of these activities into a competition – individual or team – with points given for correct answers, and prizes. The teacher could even deduct points for incorrect answers. Prizes could be awarded for the first student to answer a question correctly, or the student who wins the vocabulary bingo, or who can think of the most new words on the same topic without a dictionary. For a fun group competition there could be a league, with the same teams competing in each lesson for points that accumulate towards a running total. It depends on how competitive your students are!

Assessment:

As with the other free practice activities in Talk a Lot (show and tell, discussion questions and role plays) assessment is performed by the teacher checking and correcting during the task, giving individual and group feedback, and referring students back to the grammar learnt from forming the sentence blocks. The students’ achievement in this activity is also recorded as part of their overall lesson score (for accuracy and effort) by the teacher on each student’s course report.

Sentence Blocks – Q & A

Q: What is a sentence block?

A: A sentence block is a group of eight consecutive sentences, made up of seven lines, that forms a two-way conversation. It consists of positive and negative sentences, and two question forms – a wh- question and two questions with inversion (“yes-no” questions).

Q: What is a starting sentence?

A: The first sentence in a sentence block.

Q: What is a wh- question word?

A: A question word that begins with “wh-”. For example, “what”, “where”, “when”, “who”, “why”, “whose”, and “which”. “How” is also a wh- question word because it contains the letters “h” and “w”. Wh- questions are asked to obtain information, rather than a “yes” or “no” answer. They have a falling intonation, which means that the tone of your voice does not go up at the end of the question, as it does with “yes-no” questions.

Q: What is a question with inversion?

A: Also known as a “yes-no” question, because the answer is usually “yes” or “no”, a question with inversion is a question where the subject and verb have been swapped around (or “inverted”). They always start with an auxiliary verb (be, have, or do), a modal auxiliary verb (e.g. can, will, must, should, etc.), or verb “to be”. For example, this sentence is a statement: “John is a DJ”. To make this statement into a question with inversion we need to swap around the verb (“is”) and the subject (“John”) to make: “Is John a DJ?” Questions with inversion always have a rising intonation, which means that the tone of your voice has to go up at the end of the question.

Q: What is an auxiliary verb?

A: Auxiliary verbs are helping verbs. They don’t have any meaning of their own in the sentence, but they help the main verb to form a verb phrase. For example, in this sentence: “Ellen was talking about her sister who loves fish and chips”, “was” is an auxiliary verb (from verb “to be”) which works together with the main verb “talking” to make the past continuous verb form. There are three primary auxiliary verbs in English: “be”, “have” and “do”, as well as modal auxiliary verbs such as “can”, “will” and “must”.

Q: What is each of the eight verb forms used for?

A: The uses of the verb forms studied during this course can be summarised as follows:

Present Simple:	to talk about regular actions and things that are always true
Past Simple:	to talk about completed actions in the past
Present Continuous:	to talk about what is happening at the moment
Past Continuous:	to talk about continuous actions in the past: what was happening when...
Present Perfect:	to talk about past actions which are quite recent or relevant to now
Modal Verbs:	to talk about permission, possibilities, ability, and probability
Future Forms:	to talk about future plans, predictions and intentions
First Conditional:	to talk about what will happen if a certain condition is met

Sentence Blocks – Six Great Tips for Students

1. During each lesson we work with the same verb forms in the same order. Look for patterns. Each lesson try to apply what you have learnt in previous lessons.

2. After a "wh" question or phrase (such as "What time...?" or "How long...?") there must follow an auxiliary verb or main verb "to be".

3. Questions with inversion always start with an auxiliary verb or main verb "to be".

4. In questions with inversion the subject of the sentence must follow the auxiliary verb.

5. If there is either auxiliary verb be or have in the starting sentence, use it to make the questions and answers that follow. If there isn't, you must use do as an auxiliary verb to make the questions and answers.

6. Use as much of the starting sentence in the resulting questions and answers as you can.

Town

Role Plays:

1. "Water and books do not mix!"

- Place: Your local library
Time: 5pm
Characters: You and a librarian
Situation: You are returning a book about water-skiing that you borrowed for a recent holiday. Unfortunately the book has been damaged because you were reading it whilst water-skiing
- Scenes: i) You try to return the book when the librarian is not looking
ii) You have to explain to the librarian why the book is damaged and who damaged it (you can be an imaginative liar!)
iii) The librarian goes to ask a senior librarian for advice about how much you should be charged for the damage, then returns

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- a) The senior librarian
- b) Somebody reading at the library who says "Sshh! I'm trying to read!" quite a lot
- c) The author of the book

2. "Excuse me, where is the train station...?"

- Place: The market place in your town
Time: 2 o'clock in the afternoon
Characters: You and a foreign tourist Situation: A foreign tourist stops you to ask for directions to the train station. They don't speak English very well
- Scenes: i) The tourist asks you for directions to the train station. You don't understand them well, but give them directions to the Tourist Information Centre, where they can get a map of the town
ii) Later in the afternoon: you meet the tourist again. They can't find the Tourist Information Centre. You agree to go there with them
iii) At the Tourist Information Centre you ask for train times for the tourist, but unfortunately they have now missed their train

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- a) Someone who works at the Tourist Information Centre
- b) The tourist's friend or partner
- c) The mayor of your town

Food and Drink

Role Plays:

1. “Waiter, there’s a mouse in my potato!”

- Place: Le Maison Souris – an exclusive French restaurant
Time: 8pm
Characters: You and a waiter
Situation: You are having dinner at Le Maison Souris
- Scenes: i) During the starter you find a human hair in your soup
ii) During the main course you discover a dead mouse in your mashed potatoes
iii) During the dessert you find a gold necklace in your ice cream

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- a) Your friend or partner who is also at the meal
- b) The manager of the restaurant
- c) Another customer dining at a different table
- d) The waiter’s friend or aged parent

2. “Have you ever driven a camel before?”

- Place: A very hot desert in the middle of nowhere
Time: 12 noon – the hottest part of the day
Characters: You and a camel driver
Situation: You are a famous explorer who is lost in the desert. You desperately need to find water or you will die. The camel driver is trying to get fifty camels to the market of the nearest town, which is 10 miles away
- Scenes: i) You agree to help the camel driver in return for water
ii) During the journey some of the camels refuse to move
iii) At the end of the journey you try to buy two of the camels from the camel driver to help you continue your travels

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- a) The camel driver’s lazy assistant
- b) Your long-lost adopted brother or sister
- c) A reluctant camel
- d) An unscrupulous market trader

Shopping

Role Plays:

1. "That's not my DVD player!"

Place: A shop that sells electrical goods
Time: 4pm
Characters: You and a sales assistant
Situation: Last Saturday you bought a new DVD player from the shop. When you opened the box you discovered that the player was a completely different model from the one on the box – a much cheaper one. You would like a full refund and an apology Scenes: i) You ask for a refund. The sales assistant tries to deal with the problem but only the manager can authorise a refund. The sales assistant says that they have gone out but will be back at 5 o'clock ii) It's 5 o'clock. You return to the shop but there is no sign of the manager. You are getting angry and decide to take a DVD player from the stock room – the model that you should have had

iii) The manager returns

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- a) Another difficult customer in the shop
- b) A police officer
- c) Your elderly grandmother

2. "Extra! Extra! Read all about it!"

Place: A street in your town
Time: 11.30am
Characters: You and a newspaper seller
Situation: You buy a newspaper from a small kiosk on the street. The seller gives you the wrong change for a five pound note Scenes: i) You buy the newspaper and discover the mistake ii) You challenge the seller but they refuse to accept that they have made a mistake

iii) You decide to set up your own newspaper kiosk next to the seller's and start a price war by selling your newspapers at a discount

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- a) Somebody buying a newspaper from you
- b) Your annoying sister-in-law or uncle
- c) A teenager trying to buy cigarettes for his under-age friends

Health

Role Plays:

1. "But I must see my doctor now!"

- Place: Your local family doctor's surgery
Time: 10am
Characters: You and the doctor's receptionist
Situation: You need to make an appointment for today to see your doctor because you've got a very bad cold. You want to see the doctor now because at 10.30am you are going bowling, then having a haircut, then having a sauna, and then having a romantic meal – all with different people
- Scenes:
- You ask to see the doctor now, but there are no appointments until this afternoon
 - You phone your various friends to try to rearrange your day, but it's not possible
 - You fake a coughing fit and the receptionist has to decide whether to let you see the doctor now as an emergency, or stick to surgery policy...

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- One or more of your different friends on the phone*
- Your doctor*
- Another patient in the waiting room – someone with a more serious problem – who has been waiting to see the doctor much longer than you*

2. "It shouldn't cost the earth to keep fit!"

- Place: Your local gym
Time: 3pm
Characters: You and the gym manager Situation: You want to keep fit and lose weight, but you don't want to pay the high prices charged by the gym
- Scenes:
- You speak to the manager about a discount. You say that you are a DJ on a local radio station and can give the gym good publicity for free if they give you some money off the monthly fee
 - The manager agrees to give you a free session at the gym today, and then talk about the discount later. You enjoy using the equipment at the gym
 - Unfortunately you break one of the running machines because you are too heavy for it. The manager has to decide whether to make a deal with you or not – and what about the cost of the broken machine?

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- Somebody else using the gym who also would like a discount on the monthly fee*
- The manager's area manager, who overhears the first conversation and is not happy*

Transport

Role Plays:

1. "That's not music – it's just noise!"

- Place: You are on a bus going to work
Time: 8.15am
Characters: You and a teenager
Situation: You are on a crowded bus on the way to work. You have to stand because the bus is full. A teenager starts playing loud rap music from the speaker on their mobile phone, to impress their cool friends. Some people on the bus find this annoying
- Scenes:
- You ask the teenager to turn the music down or off. They refuse
 - You ask the bus driver to talk to the teenager about the music and how it is disturbing you and the other paying passengers. The driver is afraid of the teenagers and says that he can't hear the music
 - You take matters into your own hands and confront the teenager again. You take the phone and the teenager gets very angry

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- The bus driver*
- One of the teenager's cool friends*
- An off-duty bouncer from a local nightclub who gets involved*

2. "I wanted a return ticket to Birmingham!"

- Place: The coach station in your town
Time: 2.45pm
Characters: You and a customer service assistant Situation: You would like to find out the times of coaches to Birmingham this evening and buy a return ticket. You want to come home tomorrow afternoon
- Scenes:
- You go to the ticket counter and tell the customer service assistant what you want. They find the times for you, print your tickets and you pay them with your debit card
 - After you have left the counter, you realise that the tickets are wrong. They have given you a return ticket to Manchester, coming back next Friday morning at 4 o'clock
 - You go back to the counter, but find a long queue. You go straight to the front and try to talk to the assistant, but they won't serve you unless you go to the back of the queue – even though it was their mistake

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- The customer service assistant's supervisor*
- Somebody else waiting in the queue*

Role Plays:

1. "You did that on purpose!"

- Place: Your cousin's wedding
Time: 2.35pm
Characters: You and the bride-to-be Situation: With the wedding due to start at 3pm you are talking to your cousin's bride-to-be, trying to calm her down because she is very nervous. She was your girlfriend ten years ago in high school but you are over her now
- Scenes:
- The bride makes you laugh and you accidentally spill your glass of red wine all over her dress
 - You try to clean up the dress. The bride-to-be is in tears and very angry. She accuses you of being jealous that she is getting married to your cousin and says that you ruined her dress on purpose
 - After a moment, you and the bride-to-be realise that you are still madly in love with each other. Will the wedding be cancelled?

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- Your cousin
- The mother of the bride-to-be

2. "A mean man whose wallet rarely opened!"

- Place: The funeral of your late Uncle Charles
Time: 2.30pm
Characters: You and Charles Jnr. – Uncle Charles's son
Situation: You have been chosen to read a speech at your uncle's funeral. All of your family are there. They are all upset because Uncle Charles was much loved and will be greatly missed. You have just flown in from Fiji for the funeral and have been very busy with work lately, so you let your cousin, Charles Jnr., write the speech for you
- Scenes:
- Before the funeral Charles Jnr. gives you the speech moments before the funeral begins. You don't have time to read it before going up to the front
 - You read out the speech but as you do so it becomes clear, from the offensive language used in it, that Charles Jnr. hated his father because he had excluded him from his will. You see that the family are very offended by the speech and that your life may now be in danger
 - Later on you confront Charles Jnr., who explains why he wrote the speech

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- A family member at the funeral, who is horrified by the speech
- Auntie Gladys – Uncle Charles's wife

Clothes

Role Plays:

1. "Can I just try this on again?"

Place: A clothes shop in your town
Time: 9.30am
Characters: You and a sales assistant
Situation: You need to find an outfit for a friend's engagement party

Scenes: i) You are not sure what colour, style, or size outfit you want, so you ask the sales assistant to bring several different options ii) You try on outfit after outfit. There is something wrong with all of them. The sales assistant has to go back and forth between the shop and the changing room several times until they are absolutely fed up
iii) You decide to buy the first outfit that you tried on. The sales assistant tells you what they think of your decision

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- a) Another customer who is waiting to be served
- b) Your friend who keeps giving you advice about the clothes, which makes you even more confused
- c) The manager of the shop who is annoyed that the sales assistant isn't serving the other customers

2. "No – you go home and change!"

Place: Your partner's birthday party
Time: 8.15pm
Characters: You and a former friend that you don't get on with Situation: You have splashed out on a whole new outfit for this very special occasion

Scenes: i) Your former friend arrives at the party wearing exactly the same outfit as you. They think that you should go home and change, whilst you think that they should do the same. In the end you both decide to change ii) Later on. You both arrive at the party wearing a different outfit, but still exactly the same outfit as each other. You both go home to change
iii) Much later on. You arrive at the party wearing the first outfit again. Moments later your former friend arrives, also wearing the first outfit

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- a) Your partner, whose birthday party it is
- b) Somebody else at the party who is wearing exactly the same outfit as well
- c) An over-enthusiastic party DJ

Work

Role Plays:

1. "This company's not made of money!"

Place: Your boss's office
Time: 10.44am
Characters: You and your boss
Situation: You haven't had a pay rise for two years. You work hard and do plenty of overtime, so after a lot of thought you decide to pluck up courage to ask your boss for a pay rise Scenes: i) You ask your boss for a pay rise. They don't make a decision but ask you to come back at 4pm with a list of ten good reasons why they should give you a pay rise ii) It's 4pm and you return to see your boss. You read out your list but they still don't want to give you a pay rise. In fact, they ask you to do more overtime

iii) One hour later you are in the lift going to the ground floor. Your boss gets in as well, eating a salmon baguette. You are alone together. Suddenly they begin choking on a piece of salmon. Do you help?

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- a) Your boss's secretary
- b) A colleague at work who doesn't like you and also wants a pay rise

2. "How could you do a thing like that?"

Place: The staff canteen at your workplace
Time: 5.40pm
Characters: You and a work colleague
Situation: At the end of a very long day you go into the staff canteen to get your sandwich box from the fridge Scenes: i) You witness a colleague stealing money from the employees' holiday fund tin. You know that they have got financial problems at home. They don't know that you saw them ii) The next day everybody is talking about who could have stolen £45 from the holiday fund. You ask your colleague about it, but they say that they don't know anything about it. You tell them that you're there if they ever need to talk

iii) Your colleague comes to you and confesses. You both go to explain to your boss what happened

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- a) Your boss
- b) Another colleague, who is sure that you stole the money

Role Plays:

1. "This could be 'Your Best Move' yet!"

Place: "Your Best Move" – an estate agent's office in London
Time: 2.30pm
Characters: You and an estate agent
Situation: You are looking for a small semi-detached house in a quiet suburb, but the estate agent wants to sell you a smart expensive apartment in the centre of London

Scenes: i) In the estate agent's you arrange to view both the house and the apartment
ii) The viewing of the house
iii) The viewing of the apartment and your decision about both properties

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- a) Your friend or partner
- b) The manager of the estate agent's
- c) The present owner of the house or apartment
- d) A homeless person

2. "Just tidy up – or else!"

Place: Your home
Time: 1.30pm
Characters: Two people who live together, e.g. friends, flatmates or partners
Situation: One of you is a very tidy person and one of you is very messy. The tidy person wants the messy one to help out more at home and try to keep their home nice and clean Scenes: i) A big row: the tidy person tells the messy person to clean the house – or else! Then they go out leaving the messy person alone at home

ii) The messy person decides to either tidy up and start cleaning, or do something more interesting, like watch TV or chat to friends on the phone
iii) The tidy person comes home and finds out whether their home is clean or not. They either reward or punish the messy person depending on their work

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- a) Another tidy or messy friend / flatmate who lives there too
- b) A nosy window cleaner
- c) A timid door to door salesman who is trying to sell life insurance

Role Plays:

1. "Sssshhhh!"

Place: Your local cinema
Time: 9.40pm
Characters: You and the person sitting in front of you
Situation: You are with friends at the cinema, waiting for the film to start Scenes: i) The film begins. The person sitting in front of you is eating popcorn so loudly that it is difficult for you to hear the film. You complain and they agree to eat more quietly ii) A few minutes later their friend arrives late. They are very tall and sit in the seat directly in front of you, so that you can't see the screen very well. You complain again and the friend agrees to sit further down in their seat

iii) Half an hour later the person sitting in front of you is chatting on their mobile. You complain for the third time and they ask you if you want to "take it outside"...

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- a) The tall friend
- b) One of your friends
- c) A cinema employee, or the cinema manager

2. "I'll get you for this!"

Place: On a ski slope in the Alps
Time: 11.20am
Characters: You and another skier
Situation: You are a novice skier having lessons

Scenes: i) Whilst practising your skiing you accidentally run into somebody and break their leg ii) At the hospital you apologise for the accident, but they want to take you to court to sue you for loss of income because they are a world famous dancer and were about to star in a West End musical in London. You try to talk your way out of it and leave a false name and address
iii) One year later you are at the same skiing resort. By chance you meet the dancer again and both laugh about what happened. You slap them on the back in a friendly way, but they lose their balance and fall down the slope backwards. They end up back in hospital, this time with both legs broken

If there are three people in the group the third character could be:

- a) The other skier's partner or agent
- b) The other skier's lawyer

Role Play Extensions

Here are some additional situations for students to use as starting points for new role plays:

-----✂-----

Town:

1. At the bank: you want to take out a loan, but you have a low credit, rating so you have to try a few different banks / loan companies / loan sharks...
2. At school / college / university: you organise a field trip. On the coach you have to take charge when several students are sick. Then you are accused of stealing money from the trip fund. Did you steal it...?

-----✂-----

Food & Drink:

1. At a sandwich shop: it's your job to make the sandwiches, but you are very tired from a late night out and customers keep coming in to ask for more and more exotic sandwich fillings. You have to find the ingredients, or improvise with what you have...
2. In a pub: it's your 18th birthday and you are trying to get your first pint of beer from a landlord who becomes suspicious because of your youthful appearance...

Shopping:

1. At a supermarket checkout: you want to pay for your shopping (two tins of beans) but all you have is a £20 note. There is a long queue behind you and the checkout assistant won't accept your cash because they haven't got enough change...
2. In the butcher's / bakery / greengrocer's / any shop: first, you can't find any sausages / rolls / pears / etc. Next, the sales assistant scans your shopping but you notice that they scan a few items twice by accident...

Health:

1. At your dentist's: you make an appointment to have a tooth out. Your dentist is very chatty but it's hard to reply with your mouth full of instruments. Afterwards you discover that they have taken out the wrong tooth...
2. At a pharmacy: you need some sachets of cold relief powder. You want blackcurrant flavour, but all they have on display are lemon flavoured ones. The sales assistant is reluctant to go and check whether they have any blackcurrant flavoured sachets...

Role Play Extensions

Transport:

1. On the street: you are cycling to work when a car runs into you. You are OK, but your new bike is broken beyond repair. The driver refuses to accept responsibility for the accident, even though it was their fault...
2. In a taxi: you are on a long journey with a very boring taxi driver who tells you endless stories about the celebrities that he has had in the back of his cab. To stop him from boring you to death, you tell him that you are also a celebrity – in Belgium – and make up stories about why you are famous...

Family:

1. At a family reunion: first, you find that you don't recognise many of the people there because you haven't seen them for so long; you end up getting lots of their names wrong. Then, you are surprised when you meet your uncle's new wife, who is the same age as you, i.e. less than half his age...
2. It's Christmas Day: first, you don't get the presents that you wanted; then, you have to break up a fight between your niece and nephew over who gets to play on the new games console...

Clothes:

1. At home: you agree to give away some of your old clothes to charity. Your partner or roommate gets to work sorting them out and, without your knowledge, gives away some of your very best clothes...
2. At work: you have to wear a new uniform, but you hate it – both the design and the colour. It makes you look awful. You try different ways of improving it, much to the annoyance of your manager...

Work:

1. At work: it's your first day in a new job. You accidentally break a valuable vase in your boss's office. You try to cover up what happened but the office gossip hears about it...
2. At the careers adviser's office: you discuss your CV and skills with the careers adviser. They decide that you should apply for a boring office job and tell you to apply for four jobs that they find online. However, you have always had a burning ambition to become a professional wrestler...

Home:

1. On your driveway at home: you are washing your car, when you find a scratch and a small dent on the side. You confront your son or daughter, who borrowed the car last night to go to a party, but they are hiding somewhere in the house. You have to look in every room...
2. At home: you have just moved into a new flat and you throw a fantastic flat-warming party to celebrate. It's interrupted halfway-through when the person who lives downstairs bangs on the door and asks you to turn down the music...

Free Time:

1. At a football match: you are in a large crowd at a match between City and United. You are supporting your beloved City but it seems that you are in the wrong part of the stadium and everybody around you is passionately supporting United...
2. At a travel agent's: you are trying to decide on a holiday destination but your friend or partner just can't make up their mind...

Sentence Block Extensions:

There isn't room in this book to print in full all of the 231 sentence blocks from the extensions pages (on pages 30-33). We hope that the answers given above will give you the teacher (or you the student) enough guidance to be able to make the sentence block extensions in this book confidently. For all of the sentence block starting sentences there are at least two different wh- question words that can be used to make sentence blocks. In some cases as many as 6 or 7 different sentence blocks can be made from the same starting sentence when using different wh- question words. For example, let's look at the first starting sentence from the "Town" unit:

Peter walks two kilometres to his office every day.

On the handout the wh- question word that is given is "Who", but this starting sentence also works equally well with four other wh- questions: "What", "Where", "When", and "How far":

What does Peter do every day? / Peter walks two kilometres to his office.

Where does Peter walk two kilometres to every day? / To his office.

When does Peter walk two kilometres to his office? / Every day.

How far does Peter walk to his office every day? / Two kilometres.

The idea is easy. Change the wh- question word each time and the students can make five completely different sentence blocks from the original starting sentence, simply by finding the relevant information for the answer in the starting sentence. Sometimes the same wh- question word can be used more than once to make different sentence blocks, as with this example from the "Transport" unit: I usually get the train at 7.28.

What do you usually get at 7.28?

What do you usually do at 7.28?

What time do you usually get the train?

If your students are getting to grips with making sentence blocks and are keen to do more than the eight given on the handout each week, ask them to study some of the starting sentences and work out whether or not other wh- question words could be used to form new sentence blocks; or simply give them the sentence block extension pages and let them try to form all the possible sentence blocks that exist for each starting sentence.

Sentence Stress

What is Sentence Stress?

Sentence stress is a natural part of spoken English and students should be encouraged to use it during the course. English is a stress-timed language which is spoken with rhythm. This results from strong and weak stresses that are built into both individual words and sentences. How can students recognise stresses in a sentence? The main rules for sentence stress in a neutral sentence (one without special emphasis) are as follows:

- i) There are two kinds of word in most sentences: content words and function words. Content words are words that give the meaning in a sentence, such as nouns (e.g. bread), main verbs (e.g. eat, but not “be”), adjectives (e.g. sliced), adverbs (e.g. quickly), numbers, wh- question words (e.g. what), and negative auxiliary verbs (e.g. isn’t). Function words are words that are essential to make the sentence grammatically correct, but don’t have any intrinsic meaning on their own, i.e. without content words. They are words such as pronouns (e.g. she, them), auxiliary verbs (e.g. “are” in “They are going...”), prepositions (e.g. in, on), articles and determiners (e.g. a, the, some), conjunctions (e.g. and), quantifiers (e.g. many), and the verb “be” when used as a main verb. English native speakers may automatically listen to the content words in a sentence while absorbing the function words almost subconsciously.
- ii) The strong stresses fall on the content words in a sentence while the weak stresses fall on the function words. If a word has a strong stress in a sentence it is spoken with more emphasis and volume, and more slowly than a word with a weak stress.
- iii) The time between the stressed content words is the same, regardless of how many function words there are between them.

But does sentence stress matter? It’s a difficult area – why not just leave it out? It can be a difficult concept for students to understand – particularly if their first language is not stress-timed, i.e. in their first language all the words in a sentence are spoken with equal stress. Native speakers of English speak quite naturally with sentence stress but if you asked one why they did this they would perhaps be unaware that they were even doing it, and at a loss to explain the rules (unless they had specifically studied the subject). Nevertheless, it is an important aspect of spoken English because when a student doesn’t speak with sentence stress they can be hard to understand, even when what they’re saying is grammatically correct and really interesting – a situation that can be quite frustrating for students. Understanding sentence stress can also help students to get more out of listening to spoken English.

On pages 137 to 139 we show the sentence stress in all eighty sentence block starting sentences from this course. The words in black are content words and have strong stress, while the words in grey are function words and have weak stress. There are many different ways that teachers can highlight sentence stress during the course of each lesson; below there are a handful of suggested activities to get the ball rolling. Let’s use starting sentences from the “Food and Drink” topic in our examples.

Example with a Starting Sentence:

Michelle is having salad and pasta because she doesn’t eat meat.

This sentence can be “translated” into weak and strong stresses like this:

Michelle is having salad and pasta because she doesn’t eat meat.

The beats and the rhythm caused by the weak and strong stresses can be indicated like this:

Michelle is having salad and pasta because she doesn’t eat meat.

So this starting sentence can be summarised in terms of sentence stress as simply:

In this starting sentence the content words are: Michelle (noun), having (main verb), salad (noun), pasta (noun), doesn’t (negative auxiliary verb), eat (main verb), meat (noun). The function words are: is (auxiliary verb), and (conjunction), because (conjunction), she (personal pronoun). If you were to say the content words in order without the function words, your listener could probably work out what you meant:

Michelle having salad pasta doesn't eat meat.

Example with a Complete Sentence Block:

The best kind of bread is white sliced bread.
What

The sentences can be "translated" into weak and strong stresses like this:

The best kind of bread is white sliced bread.

What is the best kind of bread?

White sliced bread.

Is white sliced bread the best kind of bread?

Yes, it is.

Is dry wholemeal bread the best kind of bread?

No, it isn't. Dry wholemeal bread isn't the best kind of bread.

The beats and the rhythm caused by the weak and strong stresses can be indicated like this:

The best kind of bread is white sliced bread.

What is the best kind of bread?

...and so on.

If you said only the content words, with rising intonation at the end of the yes/no questions, your listener would still get a good idea of your meaning:

best bread white sliced bread.

What best bread?

White sliced bread.

white sliced bread best bread? →

Yes

dry wholemeal bread best bread? →

No, isn't. Dry wholemeal bread isn't best bread.

Activities for Highlighting Sentence Stress:

- The teacher models the sentences and students repeat afterwards individually, in pairs, or as a group.
- The students mark on their handout the words in a sentence or sentence block that are content (stressed) and function (unstressed).
- The students record themselves saying starting sentences or sentence blocks with correct sentence stress, then listen back and check their work.
- The teacher (or a partner for pair work) says a starting sentence or sentence block and the listeners have to write only the content words or only the function words from it.
- The whole group (or pairs) have to recite sentence blocks (or individual sentences) as somebody claps, with the strong stresses falling on each clap and the weak stresses in between.
- The students have to form starting sentences or sentence blocks when they are given only the content words, or only the function words, and a given verb form.
- The students listen to songs, poems, or limericks and identify the content and function words; then practise repeating the lines with a partner or within the group.
- The students have to recite all the stressed words in a sentence block from memory.
- The students compile a list of content words and function words from a number of different sentence blocks, and put the words into groups, e.g. "noun", "main verb", "pronoun", "conjunction", "adjective", etc.

Sentence Stress

- Mumbling game: the students have to say a starting sentence or sentence block, not omitting the function words completely, but mumbling them so that they are barely heard. This can demonstrate quite well how native speakers of English stress the content words – the words which have meaning – but glide over the function words as if they were of little or no importance. (Yet the function words are critically important, particularly in an English language examination situation, because they are the glue sticking the content words together.)
- The teacher writes the content words from one sentence on separate cards (you could use the template on page 140 of this book) and the students have to put them in order, then fill in the missing function words.

A Note about Emphasis:

The arrangement of weak and strong stresses in a sentence can vary according to what the speaker wishes to emphasise. Look at this example:

Ellen was talking about her sister who loves fish and chips. Neutral – no special emphasis

Ellen was talking about her sister who loves fish and chips. It is important whose sister Ellen was talking about

Ellen was talking about her sister who loves fish and chips. It is important when Ellen was talking about her sister

...and so on.

Talk a Lot

Introduction

Hello, and welcome to the second Talk a Lot course book for Elementary level!

This book is a companion volume to Book 1 and features ten exciting new lesson topics: Crime, Sport, Music, Weather, Animals, Cars, The Human Body, Colours and Numbers, Life Events, and Nature. The lesson topics in this book can be used alongside those in Book 1, according to your needs. For example, it is now possible for you to plan a longer Talk a Lot course, using lesson material from both books!

A great new feature in Book 2 is the inclusion of information exchange activities. For more details see page 14.

Once again, the aim of this book is to teach students to think in English and Talk a Lot!

The Talk a Lot course objectives are very simple:

- Every student talking in English
- Every student listening to and understanding English
- Every student thinking in English, and
- Every student taking part in class

Talk a Lot is structured so that every student can practise and improve English grammar, vocabulary, pronunciation, intonation, word and sentence stress, and interpersonal skills, by working in pairs, groups and one to one with the teacher.

The main benefits of Talk a Lot are:

- Students have to think in English during lessons in a controlled and focused way
- Students learn how to memorise correct English structures naturally, without abstract and unrelated grammar lessons
- Students learn how to construct eight different common verb forms, using positive, negative and question forms, as well as embedded grammar appropriate to their level. The verb forms studied are: Present Simple, Present Continuous, Past Simple, Past Continuous, Present Perfect, Modal Verbs, Future Forms, and First Conditional
- Students learn 400+ essential vocabulary words by heart
- Students enjoy following a simple and effective method that produces results quickly

As ever, we owe a big debt of gratitude to all of our students who have been trialling this course in recent months. We've had lots of fun doing these lessons, and we hope that you will too! We'd love to hear from you about how you have used this book and how your course went, so please feel free to contact us via our website feedback form, or by emailing info@englishbanana.com. We'd also be really excited to hear about your ideas and proposals for new Talk a Lot topics and activities that we can use in future Talk a Lot books.

With best wishes for a successful course,

Matt Purland, Ostróda, Poland (5th July 2008)

How to Use this Course

Talk a Lot

How to Use this Course

Course Outline:

- Before the course begins perform an initial assessment with each student to check that they are at a suitable level for the course, and then enrol them onto the course. This course is aimed at students who are at a good elementary level or pre-intermediate level. For this course we recommend that there are no more than ten students per class.
- The course is divided into twelve three-hour lessons. The first ten lessons each have a different topic; while lesson 11 is intended for the revision of material studied over the ten weeks, and lesson 12 is reserved for the students' examinations and an end of course review. We recommend that you hold one lesson per week, making this a twelve week course comprising 30 guided learning hours, plus 6 hours of guided revision and examination. It's up to you what order you do the lessons in; you don't have to follow our order of topics!
- If your students need more than three hours of study per week, why not offer them two 3-hour lessons per week: one Talk a Lot lesson, as described below, and one lesson using traditional teaching methods, which include conventional reading, writing and grammar-based activities that could complement the intensive speaking and listening work of the Talk a Lot lessons. You could follow a standard EFL or ESL course book such as New English File or New Headway, using material that complements the Talk a Lot lesson, so that in Week 2, for example, both 3-hour lessons are on the subject of Sport. This would then give you a course with 60 guided learning hours.
- The lesson topics are:

Lesson 1	Crime
Lesson 2	Sport
Lesson 3	Music
Lesson 4	Weather
Lesson 5	Animals
Lesson 6	Cars
Lesson 7	The Human Body
Lesson 8	Colours and Numbers
Lesson 9	Life Events
Lesson 10	Nature
Lesson 11	Revision
Lesson 12	Exam & End of Course Review

Lesson Outline

- In our lesson outline, each lesson lasts for three hours (180 teaching minutes). This can vary according to your needs, for example, in some English language classrooms one teaching hour is equal to 45 minutes, and so 3 teaching hours would be 2¼ hours. Or it may be that you have only 2 hours per week with your group of students. You can still use Talk a Lot activities to serve up a satisfying and stimulating lesson – just in a shorter timeframe.

Talk a Lot

How to Use this Course

- Each lesson focuses on a specific vocabulary topic, for example “Music”. For each lesson the teacher can draw from seven different activities:

Sentence Blocks
Discussion Questions
Information Exchanges
Discussion Words
Vocabulary Test
Lesson Test
Show & Tell

It is not necessary to use every activity in every lesson. We believe that there is more material in this book for each lesson than is needed to fill 3 hours, so the teacher can mix and match, using different activities in different lessons. Similarly, it is not necessary to do the activities in the same order (as given below) in every lesson, but mix things up each time so that students don't become used to a set lesson order.

- Bearing that in mind, here is an example of how you could structure a 3-hour long Talk a Lot lesson:

- 15 mins Welcome and vocabulary test (see page 5) based on the previous lesson's topic. The teacher reads out the twenty words to the students in their native language and they write them in English. The teacher gives back lesson tests, discusses the answers with the students, and can also ask random questions from the previous lesson's sentence blocks to check how much the students have remembered.
- 15 mins The teacher introduces the topic of this lesson, for example, “Music”. Each student has to show and tell an item to do with this topic, e.g. for “Music” a student could bring a musical instrument, or a CD or poster, and then tell the class about it. The teacher also brings something to “show and tell”, and then introduces the eight new sentence block starting sentences and wh-questions on the board or on the handout (see page 8). It is essential that the teacher checks that the students understand the sentences, so that they are meaningful to students when they practise them later on.
- The teacher asks different students to model one or two of the sentence blocks, which will act as a reminder to students of how to make the sentence blocks.
- 20 mins Students make the sentence blocks in pairs, for example, sitting back to back without eye contact. They don't write anything down and must not copy the sentence block starting sentences from the board. For this activity all the talk flows from the students making the sentence blocks from the starting sentences and wh- questions on the board or on the handout.
- 10 mins Next, the teacher introduces the eight discussion questions for this lesson to the whole class (see page 13). Again, it is important that the teacher checks that their students understand the vocabulary that is used. Students should be encouraged to use their dictionaries to check new words.

Talk a Lot

How to Use this Course

30 mins Working in pairs or small groups, students practise the discussion questions. This is free speaking practise – the antithesis of having to make pre-set sentences using the sentence blocks. The students can change partners several times in order to get a good variety of practice, then the whole class comes together and feeds back to the group, with the teacher asking additional follow-up questions. During this time the teacher removes the sentence block sentences from the board, or asks the students to return their sentence block handouts.

We're halfway through! Have a cup of tea and some fresh air – or just hang out!

25 mins After a relaxing break it's time for some brain work – the lesson test (see page 5)! The aim of this test is for the teacher to find out what vocabulary the students can remember from the previous lesson and to get an idea of how well they are coping with making the sentence blocks.

25 mins The teacher could decide to use this slot for activities with the discussion words (see page 15) or for doing the information exchanges (see page 14) – or for both, if your students are up to the challenge!

30 mins The students practise the sentence block sentences again, but this time without any written record – nothing on the board and no handout. The teacher monitors each pair and helps them where necessary, making sure that they are making the sentence blocks successfully. Towards the end of this time the whole class comes back together to give each other feedback. The teacher asks questions from the eight sentence blocks to different students, who should give a correct, or nearly correct, sentence – all from memory. In the early weeks this will be more difficult for the students, but after a few lessons with this method students should be able to answer confidently, having memorised some or all of that lesson's sentence blocks.

10 mins Open question time – students can ask any English-related question. The teacher looks at the students' workbooks (this can be any suitable course book that students work through at home and which complements the lesson) and checks students' progress. The teacher sets the topic for the next lesson and gives out the handouts for the next lesson's vocabulary test. The teacher could either give or spend a few minutes eliciting the twenty new words in the students' first language. The teacher should encourage students to keep all of their handouts in their own file, for revision and further study at home.

Assessment Methods, Tests and Examination

The overall course mark for each student is reached by continuous assessment and an end of course oral examination. Individual students are monitored throughout the course and their progress recorded in a number of different ways. The aim of using continuous assessment is to encourage students to work hard in every lesson – because every lesson counts and effort is rewarded along with accuracy – and to work hard at home, e.g. learning the vocabulary words each week.

Each student gets a combined mark out of 80 for each lesson which is based on the following:

How to Use this Course

- vocabulary test: maximum of 20 marks
- lesson test: maximum of 40 marks
- student's lesson mark – accuracy: maximum of 10 marks
- student's lesson mark – effort: maximum of 10 marks

- total lesson mark: maximum of 80 marks

The lesson marks are added together on the individual Student Course Reports as the course progresses. Students don't have access to their lesson marks as they are added together, but they do see their marks for the vocabulary and lesson tests, as well as getting feedback on these tests and on their general performance each week.

Teachers should award marks out of 10 to each student for every lesson based on the level of their achievement during the lesson (accuracy) and their commitment during the lesson (effort). It goes without saying that teachers should strive to be wholly objective and not give in to favouritism when awarding these marks.

Over the ten lessons all of the lesson marks are added together to give an individual total for each student, to which is added the score from their final exam. This gives each student a grade for the whole course, ranging from A to U (ungraded fail):

- maximum lesson mark of $80 \times 10 = 800$ marks +
- maximum final exam mark of 100 =
- maximum course mark of 900 marks

Grade system:

Grade A = 800-900 marks	First Class
Grade B = 650-800 marks	Very Good
Grade C = 550-650 marks	Good
Grade D = 400-550 marks	Fair Pass
Grade E = 250-400 marks	Pass
Grade U = less than 250 marks	Fail

Grades A-E are passes. Grade U is ungraded and means that the student has failed the course. The student's grade is recorded on their course certificate, for example:

"Grade: A"

"Achievement: First Class"

You could use one of the course certificate templates at the back of this book (see pages 106-107), or create your own.

Lesson Assessment

During pair and group work the teacher monitors the students, checking and correcting grammar and vocabulary where necessary, e.g. during discussion question and information exchange practice. In all such “free practice” work the teacher should keep referring students back to the grammar that is being learned by making the sentence blocks, for example if a student says: “What you want?”, remind them that: “You must have a verb after a wh-question.” In this way the free practice work will help to consolidate what is being learned from the more structured practice of forming the sentence blocks.

Written homework based on the topics and activities from each lesson could be given, checked and marked by the teacher. However, written work must be kept to a minimum during the lesson and students should not write out full sentence blocks. This is Talk a Lot, after all! The students may instinctively begin to write down the starting sentences from the board, or make notes about the sentence blocks, but discourage this because it is a waste of lesson time in which they have a valuable opportunity to talk in English. The Talk a Lot method encourages students to use their memories as a learning tool and to activate the grammar that they already know before they join the course. When a student writes down the sentence blocks, they give full permission to their memory to forget this information, since they know it is safely recorded somewhere. Without the safety net of pen and paper students have to challenge themselves to work harder to make the sentence blocks (which are, after all, simply question forms and answers, based around individual verb forms). The time for writing out sentence blocks is at home, where students can write to their hearts’ content! They also get a chance to see full sentence blocks in written form when they do the lesson test – once per lesson. As we have seen, the Talk a Lot certificate is based on marks gained during continuous assessment along with a final oral exam at the end of the course. Lesson assessment also includes more formal testing with regular vocabulary tests and lesson tests, the marks from which are added to each student’s running total of marks. The teacher keeps track of each student’s progress by adding the results of their tests and other marks to their individual Student Course Report (see page 17).

Vocabulary Tests

All Talk a Lot tests should be run in exam conditions, with folders and dictionaries closed, no talking, and no copying. The vocabulary test could be held near the beginning of the lesson, as a way of quietening students down and getting them into study mode. We recommend that the teacher runs the vocabulary and lesson tests in the same positions during the lessons each time so as to give a sense of structure and routine to the tests which can be reassuring for students. Teachers should try to mark the vocabulary test during the lesson break and give students their results in the same lesson. The teacher keeps a record of the students’ scores on their Student Course Reports and measures progress made, as well as spending time during and between lessons addressing issues with individual students.

Lesson Tests

The primary aim of the regular lesson test is to consolidate the work done in the previous lesson. If you run this test immediately after the break it will help to settle students down and get their minds focused again on learning English. Set a time limit of no more than 25 minutes and stick to it. As with the vocabulary tests, the aim of the lesson test is to check students’ progress and both identify weaker students who may need extra support, e.g. help with making the sentence blocks, and identify stronger students who may need a greater challenge during lessons. For example, to maximise the effect of pair work the teacher could pair a stronger student with a weaker student.

Lesson tests are marked by the teacher after the lesson and the results given to students at the beginning of the next lesson, when there is time for a brief discussion of incorrect answers and other points raised by the test. The results from both tests enable the teacher to see not only who is paying attention during lessons, e.g. when making the sentence blocks, but also who is working at home: learning the vocabulary words, both meanings and spellings, and writing out sentence blocks.

At their discretion, a teacher may allow students who have missed a lesson to catch up on course marks by taking both tests at another time, e.g. after the present lesson. Or the teacher may decide that the student has missed the lesson and so cannot catch up on the marks, a scenario that will affect their final course score. However, if the latter applies the teacher should give the student in question the material to study at home in their own time.

Verb Forms Practice

These pages can be introduced by the teacher as extra worksheets at any time during the course if students are having problems with sentence blocks based on a particular verb form, or if they need more focused verb forms practice. A follow up activity would be for students to imagine their own sentence blocks based on particular verb forms, e.g. the teacher asks students to work in pairs and make four new sentence blocks using present perfect form – orally, without writing anything down.

In general, it's better for students to use a variety of different verb forms in a normal lesson, rather than studying a different verb form each lesson, because if a student misses one lesson they won't have missed out on studying a complete verb form.

End of Course Oral Examination

General Notes on the Examination:

The Talk a Lot end of course exam is a one to one oral examination with the teacher reading the questions and the student answering. The exam should last for a maximum of 20 minutes. The exam is recorded onto tape and marked by the teacher. The results are added to the student's individual Student Course Report and their overall course score and final grade can be calculated, which are then added to the student's certificate.

At no time should the student see the examination paper, whether before, during or after the examination. Nor should the student write down anything during the exam. The teacher writes the starting sentence and question word (printed in bold) on the board for each sentence block question.

The examination questions are taken randomly from the course work studied and include material from every topic covered during the course. During the examination the teacher should not prompt the student for answers or help them in any way, apart from to explain the instructions so that the student understands what they have to do. Students may not use a dictionary during this examination.

At the end of the course the teacher could give a prize to the student (or students) with:

- the best course score overall
- the best vocabulary test grades overall

Marking Guide:

There are four kinds of question that form the examination:

1. Make sentence blocks (questions 1, 5, 9, and 13)

The maximum score is 8 marks. Students score one mark for each fully correct line, with correct intonation and sentence stress, and one mark for naming the correct verb form. Students get only half a mark if the intonation and/or sentence stress of a line is incorrect. In the last two lines of each sentence block the answers will vary as students have to change part of the original information to produce a negative answer. Accept any answer that is grammatically correct and makes sense within the given context.

Don't penalise students for making contractions, or not making them. For example, if the answer on the examination paper says "No, he doesn't", but the student says "No, he does not", don't mark them down. It is still an accurate answer.

2. Answer discussion questions (questions 3, 7, 10 and 14)

Students can score up to a maximum of 4 points for each question based on the following criteria:

The student should answer the question and speak for approximately 1 minute:

- | | |
|----------|--|
| 4 marks: | the student produces sentences which are completely or almost completely correct in terms of grammar, pronunciation, intonation, and sentence stress. There are between 0-2 errors. Excellent use of vocabulary and interesting subject matter |
| 3 marks: | the student produces sentences which are good in terms of grammar, pronunciation, intonation, and sentence stress, but there are between 3-4 errors. Good use of vocabulary |
| 2 marks: | the student produces sentences which can be understood in terms of grammar, pronunciation, intonation, and sentence stress, but there are many errors |
| 1 mark: | the student attempts to answer the question, but not using full sentences nor correct grammar, pronunciation, intonation, and sentence stress. Part of their answer can be clearly understood, but there are many errors |
| 0 marks: | the student has not attempted the question or the answer is incoherent |

The teacher should make a note in the box provided of several examples of the student's performance, including errors as well as correct structures.

3. State ten vocabulary words on a given topic (questions 4, 6, 11 and 15)

When students have to list ten vocabulary words, the teacher could keep a tally in the box provided, e.g. -III IIII ... Give a half mark in the event of wrong word stress or incorrect intonation and/or pronunciation. When stating ten different vocabulary words the student cannot include the example word which is given in the question.

4. Answer discussion word questions (questions 2, 8, 12 and 16)

The answers and marks for these questions are provided on the examination paper. Give a half mark in the event of wrong word stress or incorrect intonation and/or pronunciation.

Sentence Blocks

Designed specifically for the Talk a Lot course, the sentence block method is a brand new way to teach English grammar with speaking practice. The main benefit of this method is that the students have to do all of the work. They must listen, think hard, and remember. They must produce eight sentences, both positive and negative, using a given verb form, and two different question forms, using wh- questions and questions with auxiliary verbs. They must produce the eight sentences based on a given starting sentence and a given wh- question word, using a pre-agreed set of rules. When they are working on the sentence blocks students are speaking and memorising correct English. They are learning to use key verb forms in English, forming questions and responses organically as they focus all their attention on making the sentence blocks successfully. They are also learning new vocabulary and have to produce their own ideas to make the last two negative sentences work.

So what is a sentence block and how do you make one? A sentence block is a group of eight consecutive sentences, made up of seven lines, that forms a two-way conversation. There are strict rules governing how a sentence block must be made, which students should learn.

At the beginning of the course:

The students receive two handouts explaining the basic terminology used when talking about sentence blocks and some helpful rules for making them (see pages 18 and 19). The teacher should spend time discussing these pages with the students, in particular explaining:

- When we use each of the eight verb forms that are explored during the course
- What we mean by subject-verb “inversion”
- How auxiliary verbs are used, and the rule for using “do” as an auxiliary verb

In the first lesson or two the teacher will need to train the students to make the seven lines that form a sentence block. In the ensuing lessons students should be able to form the sentence blocks themselves, based on the given sentences on the board or handout. It is very important that in each lesson the teacher ensures that students understand the vocabulary used in the sentence blocks before they are let loose on the task of making them.

This is an example of how an individual student could be coached to form a sentence block for the first time. When coaching groups, ask a different student for each of the lines.

The teacher has written the first starting sentence on the board; for example, this one from the “Music” lesson:

We saw a great jazz concert at the Palace Theatre last night.

The teacher:

OK, we're going to make a sentence block. There are seven lines in a sentence block and eight different sentences. [Pointing to the board at the starting sentence.] This is the first line. Can you read it for me, please? [The student reads it out loud.] Do you understand this sentence?

The student:

Yes.

The teacher:

OK. [Writes "Where" underneath the starting sentence.] To make the second line can you ask a "where" question based on the starting sentence?

The student:

Where did you see a great jazz concert last night?

The teacher:

Good. Very good. Excellent.

Note: if a student has a problem producing any part of the sentence block, the teacher should prompt them with the first word, then the next, and in this way "coax" the sentence out of them by, if necessary, saying the whole sentence and getting the student to say it with them, then to repeat it without the teacher's help.

The teacher:

And what is the short answer?

The student:

At the Palace Theatre.

The teacher:

OK. Great.

Note: it is very important that the teacher praises the student as they get sentences right and gently encourages them when they have taken a wrong turn. It is also important for the teacher to keep the momentum going so that the sentence block is made with a sense of rhythm and an almost urgent pace. This will keep the student focused and thinking about the task in hand.

The teacher:

So now we've got three lines. Can you repeat them for me? [The student does so correctly.] Now, let's get to five lines. Ask a question with inversion.

The student:

Did you see a great jazz concert at the Palace Theatre last night?

The teacher:

Good. And the short answer?

The student:

Yes.

The teacher:
Yes, what?

The student:
Yes, we did.

The teacher:
Good. Very good. So now we've got five lines. We're almost there. Can you repeat the five lines, please? [The student does so correctly.] OK, so, to complete the sentence block, let's ask the same kind of question with inversion but this time to get a negative answer. Look at the question word. Focus on the "where". Change the "where" to get a negative answer.

The student:
Did you see a great jazz concert at the Roxy last night?

The teacher:
And give a short answer in the negative.

The student:
No, we didn't.

The teacher:
Then a full negative answer. The last line is made up of two negative sentences.

The student:
We didn't see a great jazz concert at the Roxy last night.

Note: students have to invent something here ("...at the Roxy last night?") that makes sense in the same context. They should try to think of a sensible option to get a negative answer. For example, the teacher must not accept: "Did you see a great jazz concert at the newsagent's last night?" because it doesn't make sense. Students often struggle to remember to make two negative sentences for the last line. Encourage them and stress the two negative sentences.

The teacher:
Excellent! Now tell me all seven lines...

Throughout, the teacher should help the student to achieve the correct pronunciation, word and sentence stress (see page 139), rhythm and intonation. If a student makes a mistake during a line, ask them to repeat the whole line again. Of course, in the example above the student has given almost all of the correct answers straight away. This is purely to serve a purpose in this guide – to give a clear example of what the students should aim for. The teacher should also encourage the students to think about word and sentence stress and to emphasise the correct words in each sentence, for example:

Did you see a great jazz concert at the Palace Theatre last night?

Yes, we did.

Did you see a great jazz concert at the Roxy last night?

No, we didn't. We didn't see a great jazz concert at the Roxy last night.

How to Use this Course

Students may have a tendency to try to say all seven lines with a questioning intonation at the end of each line. For example, they might say:

The student:

Did you see a great jazz concert at the Roxy last night? No we didn't?

Ask them to think about the meaning of what they are saying and to make definite statements without the questioning intonation. Some students may try to gabble and deliver their lines very quickly without apparent thought of what they mean – wholly focused on their goal of remembering each line and forming the sentence blocks as quickly as possible. Ask them to slow down and to focus on what each sentence means.

So, in the example above the seven lines and eight sentences of the sentence block are:

1. We saw a great jazz concert at the Palace Theatre last night. (starting sentence)
2. Where did you see a great jazz concert last night? (wh- question)
3. At the Palace Theatre. (short answer)
4. Did you see a great jazz concert at the Palace Theatre last night? (question with inversion)
5. Yes, we did. (short answer)
6. Did you see a great jazz concert at the Roxy last night? (question with inversion to get a negative answer)
7. No, we didn't. We didn't see a great jazz concert at the Roxy last night. (two sentences – a short negative answer and a long negative answer)

The teacher should ensure that the students follow the sentence block structure and that they recap each group of sentences after the 3rd and 5th lines. If a student has a tendency to “Um...” and “Er...” their way through each line, challenge them to say the lines without doing this. As they monitor the pairs engaged in making the sentence blocks – saying one line each – the teacher will sometimes need to be firm with the students, and ask them to keep focused when it looks as though their minds are beginning to wander, and of course the teacher also needs to keep focused! For example, when leading sentence block practice at the front of the class, the teacher will need to be one step ahead of the students and know the next sentence in their mind – what they want the student to produce – before the student produces it.

Embedded Grammar:

In each lesson students will practise making positive sentences, negative sentences and question forms using the following verb forms:

- present simple
- present continuous
- past simple
- past continuous
- present perfect
- modal verbs (e.g. can, should, must, have to, etc.)
- future forms (with “will” and “going to”)

- first conditional

While doing sentence block practice the students may be unaware that they are using eight different verb forms. It is better not to focus on this and blow their minds with grammar, but instead make sure that the students are making the sentence blocks correctly. For example, it is essential that students understand the eight starting sentences on the board or handout at the beginning of the lesson, and also know how to make a sentence block, before they begin pair work with a partner.

The starting sentences all contain embedded grammar, which means grammar that occurs as a natural part of the sentence block as it is being spoken and automatically memorised, rather than grammar that is explicitly presented to students as an isolated grammar topic, such as: "In today's lesson we are going to study wh- questions..." etc. The embedded grammar in the sentence blocks at Elementary level includes:

- positive and negative forms
- use of articles
- use of auxiliary verbs
- a variety of main verbs in each unit
- subject and object pronouns
- yes/no questions
- wh- questions
- active and passive sentences
- punctuation marks
- prepositions of place and time
- some/any
- singular/plural
- nouns: common, proper, abstract, countable, uncountable, etc.
- intensifiers – too, really, very, completely, etc.
- use of infinitives
- adjectives
- adverbs of frequency and manner
- possessive pronouns
- determiners – this, that, those, these, etc.
- there is/there are
- formal and informal situations
- use of gerunds
- comparatives and superlatives
- relative clauses – that, which, who, where, etc.

The teacher could pick up on any or all of these grammar topics in more detail if they run the course as a 60-hour course (see page 1).

Miscellaneous Notes:

- As well as with students in groups and pairs, this method can also be used successfully with students on a one to one basis, with the teacher prompting the student to produce the sentence blocks, first with the sentences on the board or handout, and later from memory.

Talk a Lot

How to Use this Course

- Teachers (or students) can also imagine their own starting sentences based on the verb form or vocabulary that they wish to practise.

Different Ways to Practice Forming Sentence Blocks:

- In a circle – the teacher or a student leads and chooses each student in turn to form the complete sentence block.
- The students sit back to back in pairs and say one line each, then reverse who starts.
- The students chant a complete sentence block altogether as a group.
- The students say one line or one word each, going around the group in a circle.
- The teacher says a random line from a sentence block and asks a student to produce the next line.

Note: every sentence block can be said or chanted in a continuous way by adding an eighth line at the end that begins with “So...” and continues with the question on line 2. For example:

Line 1: Joanne can play the saxophone really well.

Line 2: Who can play... [etc.]

Line 7: No, he can't. George can't play the saxophone really well.

Line 8: So, who can play... [then, continuing with line 3, “Joanne can.” and so on]

Discussion Questions

Students work in pairs with student A asking student B the first question, then student B asking student A the same question, before moving on to the next question. After between 5-10 minutes the students change partners and repeat the process with a different student. Where there are empty boxes on the handout – for example questions 2, 4 and 7 on the Cars Discussion Questions handout – the students should write down their partners' answers. This is partly to encourage the students to focus on the task in hand, and partly so that the teacher, who should be monitoring all the pairs, can see written evidence that the questions are being asked and answered. Before the students move off to work in pairs the teacher should look at the handout with the whole group and ensure that everybody understands the task and vocabulary used in the questions before they begin. For example the teacher could pre-teach some of the more difficult words and there could be a dictionary race to see which student finds each word the fastest.

Extension activity: pairs that have finished the activity early could think up their own new discussion questions based on the same topic, or the teacher could prepare additional questions for the students.

At the end of the activity the whole group comes back together for group feedback, where the teacher chooses a student to read a question and tell the class both their own answer and their partner's answer. The teacher should highlight errors that have occurred and elicit the answers from the group. Interesting structures could be explored in more detail on the board.

Assessment:

This activity is assessed by the teacher checking and correcting students as they monitor each pair, listening in and making comments where necessary, e.g. challenging incorrect question forms, and writing down notes for later exposition on the board during the group feedback period. The students' achievement in this activity is recorded as part of their overall lesson score (for accuracy and effort) by the teacher at the end of the lesson.

Information Exchanges

Information exchanges are a terrific way to get students talking because they can only be completed by students asking each other questions. The objective of each information exchange is for students to find out and write down the information that is missing from their handout, but which their partner has. This objective is complemented by a super-objective – or additional purpose – which is topic-specific. For example, in the “Crime” information exchange students have to find out information about possible suspects by exchanging information with their partners – so that they can make a deduction as to who is the murderer. In “The Human Body” information exchange students have to find out details about the physical appearance of four different people, so that they can decide who they would most like to swap bodies with for a day... and so on!

Students should work with a partner and not look at their partner’s handout. If they need to know a spelling or look up a word in their dictionary their partner could write the spelling on a separate piece of paper, or better still say it out loud. Do discourage students from simply reading and copying from their partner’s handout – this is Talk a Lot, not Write a Lot!

This activity is also great for practising and consolidating question forms and answers. The teacher should monitor the students as they work and encourage correct question forms, or spend time looking at the question forms for each information exchange on the board, for example:

Topic: “Cars – Buying a Used Car” – sample questions and answers:

Student A: “What make is Used Car 1?”	Student B: “It’s a Citroën.”
Student B: “What model is Used Car 1?”	Student A: “It’s a C4 Picasso.”
Student A: “What colour is Used Car 2?”	Student B: “It’s brown and grey.”
Student B: “How many miles has Used Car 2 done?”	Student A: “It’s done 126,001 miles.”
Student A: “What kind of fuel does Used Car 2 use?”	Student B: “Petrol.”
Student B: “How many doors has Used Car 3 got?”	Student B: “It’s got five doors.”
Student A: “Has Used Car 4 got a CD player?”	Student B: “Yes, it has.”

There is a complete list of sample questions and answers for each topic’s information exchange activity in the answer section at the back of this book (see page 116), along with a completed grid for each activity.

Assessment:

As with the discussion questions activity this activity is mainly assessed by the teacher checking and correcting students as they monitor the groups, listening for errors that could be dissected later on in a group feedback session, and correcting question forms and grammar in line with the work being done on forming sentence blocks. Again, the students’ achievement in this activity is recorded as part of their overall lesson score (for accuracy and effort) by the teacher when they sit down and write each student’s course report.

Discussion Words and Question Sheets

It's amazing how much you can do with forty cut-out vocabulary words! We have outlined many activities for using these words with students on the discussion words question sheets. First of all, print a discussion words page onto thin card and cut up the cards with scissors. If possible you could laminate them to make them extra sturdy.

The main activity goes as follows: sit down with the whole class around a large table and lay out all of the cards face down. Students take a number of cards each. The number they take depends on the number of students in the class and for how long the teacher wants the activity to last, e.g. for a ten minute activity ten students could each take two cards.

Go around the group one student at a time. Each student picks up a card and has to describe the word in English without saying it. The other students have to guess the word. The students could use dictionaries to find new words that they don't know. It's possible for students to make this activity deliberately harder for their peers by giving a more cryptic description!

Using the Question Sheets:

The teacher reads the questions out loud in a random order. Or one or more of the students could read the questions out. The teacher should use as many of the questions as is necessary to fill the time that they have allotted to this activity. For example, if you have 25 minutes for this activity it's unlikely that you will need to use the main activity as described above as well as all of the questions on the handout. As with the Talk a Lot course in general, there is more material here than will probably be needed; but as all teachers know, it's better to have too much material planned for a lesson than not enough!

Extension Activities:

- The students work on the main activity with the words in pairs or small groups.
- The students have to think of ten, twenty, thirty or forty additional words on the same topic, e.g. Music, and make their own discussion words cards.
- The teacher or the students invent new questions based on the original/new words.
- Have a game of vocabulary bingo. Each student writes down fifteen words from the forty words in three lines: five on the top, five on the middle and five on the bottom. The teacher reads out words from the group at random. The students cross out the words they have written down when they hear the teacher say them. The students race to see who can cross off the first line, then two lines, then all of the words.
- "Yes/No" questions: one student takes a card with a word on it, keeping it secret from the others, who have to ask "Yes/No" questions in order to find out what the word is. The first student can only answer "Yes" or "No". For example, for car words the other students could ask: "Is it inside a car?", "Can I put my foot on it?", "Does it play music?", etc. until they are able to guess the identity of the word. This is a great activity to get students making questions with inversion.
- The students match the phonetic and English spellings of different words (see pages 147-151), translate words into/from the IPA, or group words by the sounds they contain.

How to Use this Course

- A student mimes different words without talking, while the others have to guess them.
- Word association activities:
 - a) the teacher (or a student) chooses a word and each student has to say six words that they associate with this word, or each student in the group has to say one word. For example, if the word is “head” the students could say “nose”, “face”, “eye”, “ear”, “chin”, “mouth”, and so on.
 - b) the teacher (or a student) chooses a word and the first student says the first word that comes into their head, followed by the next student and the next in a kind of word association chain. See how long your group can go for without running out of steam. You may be surprised where you end up! For example: “dog” > “bark” > “tree” > “field” > “farm” > “cow” > “milk”, and so on.
- Play vocabulary battleships! Students have to work in pairs and they both have a copy of the discussion words page from that lesson’s topic, e.g. “Sport”. They should label the columns at the top A, B, C, and D, and the rows on the left-hand side from top to bottom 1-10, so that the word “volleyball” is in cell B5, for example. Each student marks ten cells in their grid – these are their “battleships”. Without showing their partner their page, each student asks for a cell on their partner’s grid, for example, “Can I have D5, please?” If this cell (“cue”) has not been marked as a battleship, the partner says, “Miss!” and play passes to them. They request a cell on their partner’s grid, e.g. “I would like A6, please”, which is “swimming”. If “swimming” has been marked as a battleship, the player who marked it must describe the word without saying it. If their partner can guess it, they “sink” the battleship and can choose another cell on the grid. The object of the game is to sink all of your partner’s battleships by a) guessing the correct grid reference, and b) guessing the vocabulary word. Obviously it is in each player’s interests to make the definitions of their words as oblique as possible, so this is a good game for encouraging creative and lateral thinking!
- Make any of these activities into a competition – individual or team – with points given for correct answers, and prizes. The teacher could even deduct points for incorrect answers. Prizes could be awarded for the first student to answer a question correctly, or the student who wins the vocabulary bingo, or who can think of the most new words on the same topic without a dictionary. For a fun group competition there could be a league, with the same teams competing in each lesson for points that accumulate towards a running total. It depends on how competitive your students are!

Assessment:

As with the other free practice activities in Talk a Lot (show and tell, discussion questions and information exchanges) assessment is performed by the teacher checking and correcting during the task, giving individual and group feedback, and referring students back to the grammar learnt from forming the sentence blocks. The students’ achievement in this activity is also recorded as part of their overall lesson score (for accuracy and effort) by the teacher on each student’s course report.

Sentence Blocks – Q & A

Q: What is a sentence block?

A: A sentence block is a group of eight consecutive sentences, made up of seven lines, that forms a two-way conversation. It consists of positive and negative sentences, and two question forms – a wh- question and two questions with inversion (“yes-no” questions).

Q: What is a starting sentence?

A: The first sentence in a sentence block.

Q: What is a wh- question word?

A: A question word that begins with “wh-”. For example, “what”, “where”, “when”, “who”, “why”, “whose”, and “which”. “How” is also a wh- question word because it contains the letters “h” and “w”. Wh- questions are asked to obtain information, rather than a “yes” or “no” answer. They have a falling intonation, which means that the tone of your voice does not go up at the end of the question, as it does with “yes-no” questions.

Q: What is a question with inversion?

A: Also known as a “yes-no” question, because the answer is usually “yes” or “no”, a question with inversion is a question where the subject and verb have been swapped around (or “inverted”). They always start with an auxiliary verb (be, have, or do), a modal auxiliary verb (e.g. can, will, must, should, etc.), or verb “to be”. For example, this sentence is a statement: “John is a DJ”. To make this statement into a question with inversion we need to swap around the verb (“is”) and the subject (“John”) to make: “Is John a DJ?” Questions with inversion always have a rising intonation, which means that the tone of your voice has to go up at the end of the question.

Q: What is an auxiliary verb?

A: Auxiliary verbs are helping verbs. They don’t have any meaning of their own in the sentence, but they help the main verb to form a verb phrase. For example, in this sentence: “Jean was riding her horse in the field for half an hour this morning”, “was” is an auxiliary verb (from verb “to be”) which works together with the main verb “riding” to make the past continuous verb form. There are three primary auxiliary verbs in English: “be”, “have” and “do”, as well as modal auxiliary verbs such as “can”, “will” and “must”.

Q: What is each of the eight verb forms used for?

A: The uses of the verb forms studied during this course can be summarised as follows:

Present Simple:	to talk about regular actions and things that are always true
Past Simple:	to talk about completed actions in the past
Present Continuous:	to talk about what is happening at the moment
Past Continuous:	to talk about continuous actions in the past: what was happening when...
Present Perfect:	to talk about past actions which are quite recent or relevant to now
Modal Verbs:	to talk about permission, possibilities, ability, and probability
Future Forms:	to talk about future plans, predictions and intentions
First Conditional:	to talk about what will happen if a certain condition is met

Talk a Lot

Sentence Blocks – Six Great Tips for Students

1. During each lesson we work with the same verb forms in the same order. Look for patterns. Each lesson try to apply what you have learnt in previous lessons.

2. After a "wh" question or phrase (such as "What time...?" or "How long...?") there must follow an auxiliary verb or main verb "to be".

3. Questions with inversion always start with an auxiliary verb or main verb "to be".

4. In questions with inversion the subject of the sentence must follow the auxiliary verb.

5. If there is either auxiliary verb be or have in the starting sentence, use it to make the questions and answers that follow. If there isn't, you must use do as an auxiliary verb to make the questions and answers.

6. Use as much of the starting sentence in the resulting questions and answers as you can.

Sentence Block Extensions:

There isn't room in this book to print in full all of the 276 sentence blocks from the extensions pages (see pages 30-33). We hope that the answers given above will give you the teacher (or you the student) enough guidance to be able to make the sentence block extensions in this book confidently. For all of the sentence block starting sentences there are at least two different wh- question words that can be used to make sentence blocks. In some cases seven or even nine different sentence blocks can be made from the same starting sentence when using different wh- question words. For example, let's look at the third starting sentence from the "Life Events" unit:

Lorna graduated from Hull University last July.

On the handout the wh- question word that is given is "When", but this starting sentence also works equally well with four other wh- question words: "What", "Where", "Who", and "Which":

What happened to Lorna last July? / She graduated from Hull University.

Where did Lorna graduate from last July? / From Hull University.

Who graduated from Hull University last July? / Lorna did.

Which university did Lorna graduate from last July? / Hull University.

The idea is easy. Change the wh- question word each time and you can make five completely different sentence blocks from the original starting sentence, simply by finding the relevant information for the answer in the starting sentence. Sometimes the same wh- question word can be used more than once to make different sentence blocks, as with this example from the "Colours and Numbers" unit: Eddie has bought his wife a dozen red roses once a month since Valentine's Day.

Who has bought his wife a dozen red roses once a month since Valentine's Day? / Eddie has.

Who has Eddie bought a dozen red roses for once a month since Valentine's Day? / His wife.

If your students are getting to grips with making sentence blocks and are keen to do more than the eight given on the handout each week, ask them to study some of the starting sentences and work out whether or not other wh- question words could be used to form new sentence blocks; or simply give them the sentence block extension pages and let them work on forming all of the possible sentence blocks that exist for each starting sentence.

Notes: (i) where prices are shown as monthly payments on the student's handout, the total price above assumes that 0% interest free credit applies for the full term of the payment plan. (ii) Clearly, Exotic Sofas and World of Sofas have the best sofa deals, while the other two stores have more upmarket prices; which proves that it's always well worth "shopping around" for expensive items such as sofas!

Sentence Stress

What is Sentence Stress?

Sentence stress is a natural part of spoken English and students should be encouraged to use it during the course. English is a stress-timed language which is spoken with rhythm. This results from strong and weak stresses that are built into both individual words and sentences. How can students recognise stresses in a sentence? The main rules for sentence stress in a neutral sentence (one without special emphasis) are as follows:

- i) There are two kinds of word in most sentences: content words and function words. Content words are words that give the meaning in a sentence, such as nouns (e.g. bread), main verbs (e.g. eat, but not “be”), adjectives (e.g. sliced), adverbs (e.g. quickly), numbers, wh- question words (e.g. what), and negative auxiliary verbs (e.g. isn’t). Function words are words that are essential to make the sentence grammatically correct, but don’t have any intrinsic meaning on their own, i.e. without content words. They are words such as pronouns (e.g. she, them), auxiliary verbs (e.g. “are” in “They are going...”), prepositions (e.g. in, on), articles and determiners (e.g. a, the, some), conjunctions (e.g. and), quantifiers (e.g. many), and the verb “be” when used as a main verb. English native speakers may automatically listen to the content words in a sentence while absorbing the function words almost subconsciously.
- ii) The strong stresses fall on the content words in a sentence while the weak stresses fall on the function words. If a word has a strong stress in a sentence it is spoken with more emphasis and volume, and more slowly than a word with a weak stress.
- iii) The time between the stressed content words is the same, regardless of how many function words there are between them.

But does sentence stress matter? It’s a difficult area – why not just leave it out? It can be a difficult concept for students to understand – particularly if their first language is not stress-timed, i.e. in their first language all the words in a sentence are spoken with equal stress. Native speakers of English speak quite naturally with sentence stress but if you asked one why they did this they would perhaps be unaware that they were even doing it, and at a loss to explain the rules (unless they had specifically studied the subject). Nevertheless, it is an important aspect of spoken English because when a student doesn’t speak with sentence stress – or uses incorrect sentence stress – they can be hard to understand, even when what they’re saying is grammatically correct and really interesting – a situation that can be quite frustrating for students. Understanding sentence stress can also help students to get more out of listening to spoken English.

On pages 142 to 144 we show the sentence stress in all eighty sentence block starting sentences from this course. The words in black are content words and have strong stress, while the words in grey are function words and have weak stress. There are many different ways that teachers can highlight sentence stress during the course of each lesson; below there are a handful of suggested activities to get the ball rolling. Let’s use a starting sentence from the “Music” topic as our first example.

Example with a Starting Sentence:

Marion is singing a song that was written by George Gershwin.

This sentence can be “translated” into weak and strong stresses like this:

Marion is singing a song that was written by George Gershwin.

The beats and the rhythm caused by the weak and strong stresses can be indicated like this:

Marion is singing a song that was written by George Gershwin.

So this starting sentence can be summarised in terms of sentence stress as simply:

In this starting sentence the content words are: Marion (noun), singing (main verb), song (noun), written (main verb), George Gershwin (noun). The function words are: is (auxiliary verb), a (article), that (relative pronoun), by (passive “by”). If you were to say the content words in order without the function words, your listener could probably work out what you meant:

Sentence Stress

Marion singing song written George Gershwin.

Example with a Complete Sentence Block (from "The Human Body"):

Terry is showing his friends the stitches in his shoulder.
What

The sentences can be "translated" into weak and strong stresses like this:

Terry is showing his friends the stitches in his shoulder.
What is Terry showing his friends?
The stitches in his shoulder.
Is Terry showing his friends the stitches in his shoulder?
Yes, he is.
Is Terry showing his friends his holiday photos?
No, he isn't. Terry isn't showing his friends his holiday photos.

The beats and the rhythm caused by the weak and strong stresses can be indicated like this:

Terry is showing his friends the stitches in his shoulder.

What is Terry showing his friends?

...and so on.

If you said only the content words, with rising intonation at the end of the yes/no questions, your listener would still get a good idea of your meaning:

Terry showing friends stitches shoulder.
What Terry showing friends?
stitches shoulder.
Terry showing friends stitches shoulder?
Yes.
Terry showing friends holiday photos?
No, isn't. Terry isn't showing friends holiday photos.

Activities for Highlighting Sentence Stress:

- The teacher models the sentences and students repeat afterwards individually, in pairs, or as a group.
- The students mark on their handout the words in a sentence or sentence block that are content (stressed) and function (unstressed).
- The students record themselves saying starting sentences or sentence blocks with correct sentence stress, then listen back and check their work.
- The teacher (or a partner for pair work) says a starting sentence or sentence block and the listeners have to write only the content words or only the function words from it.
- The whole group (or pairs) have to recite sentence blocks (or individual sentences) as somebody claps, with the strong stresses falling on each clap and the weak stresses in between.
- The students have to form starting sentences or sentence blocks when they are given only the content words, or only the function words, and a given verb form.
- The students listen to songs, poems, or limericks and identify the content and function words; then practise repeating the lines with a partner or within the group.
- The students have to recite all the stressed words in a sentence block from memory.
- The students compile a list of content words and function words from a number of different sentence blocks, and put the words into groups, e.g. "noun", "main verb", "pronoun", "conjunction", "adjective", etc.

Sentence Stress

- Mumbling game: the students have to say a starting sentence or sentence block, not omitting the function words completely, but mumbling them so that they are barely heard. This can demonstrate quite well how native speakers of English stress the content words – the words which have meaning – but glide over the function words as if they were of little or no importance. (Yet the function words are critically important, particularly in an English language examination situation, because they are the glue sticking the content words together.)
- The teacher writes the content words from one sentence on separate cards (you could use the template on page 145 of this book) and the students have to put them in order, then fill in the missing function words.

A Note about Emphasis:

The arrangement of weak and strong stresses in a sentence can vary according to what the speaker wishes to emphasise. Look at this example:

Alan was taking a box of five hundred brown envelopes to the stockroom when he slipped on a wet floor.
[Neutral – no special emphasis.]

Alan was taking a box of five hundred brown envelopes to the stockroom when he slipped on a wet floor.
[It is important how many brown envelopes Alan was taking.]

Alan was taking a box of five hundred brown envelopes to the stockroom when he slipped on a wet floor.
[It is important where Alan was taking the box of brown envelopes.]

...and so on.

Talk a Lot

Elementary Handbook

Introduction

Hello, and welcome to the Talk a Lot Elementary Handbook!

This handbook shows you how to use Talk a Lot materials to learn or teach spoken English, as well as providing background information and practice worksheets on related topics, such as connected speech, sentence and word stress, and the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA).

The Talk a Lot course objectives are very simple:

- Every student talking in English
- Every student listening to and understanding English
- Every student thinking in English, and
- Every student taking part in class

Talk a Lot is structured so that every student can practise and improve English grammar, vocabulary, pronunciation, fluency, word and sentence stress, and interpersonal skills, by working in pairs, groups and one to one with the teacher.

The main benefits of Talk a Lot are:

- Students have to think in English during lessons in a controlled and focused way
- Students learn how to memorise correct English structures naturally, without abstract and unrelated grammar lessons
- Students learn how to construct eight different common verb forms, using positive, negative and question forms, as well as embedded grammar appropriate to their level. The verb forms studied are: Present Simple, Present Continuous, Past Simple, Past Continuous, Present Perfect, Modal Verbs, Future Forms, and First Conditional
- Students learn many essential vocabulary words by heart, including word stress and the sounds of English
- Students learn how to become more fluent when speaking in English, by joining together words in a sentence using the techniques of connected speech
- Students enjoy following a simple and effective method that produces results quickly

So far we've published two Talk a Lot Elementary books. The ten lesson topics studied in Talk a Lot Elementary Book 1 are:

Town, Food, Shopping, Health, Transport, Clothes, Work, Family, Home, and Free Time

whilst the ten lesson topics studied in Talk a Lot Elementary Book 2 are:

Crime, Sport, Music, Weather, Animals, Cars, The Human Body, Colours and Numbers, Life Events, and Nature

A third Talk a Lot Elementary book is currently in preparation, with the following brand new lesson topics:

Elementary Handbook

Introduction

Learning English, Films, Hospital, Books, Airport, Television, Education, Money, The Environment, and Holidays

Important Note

This book is the Talk a Lot Elementary Handbook, and doesn't contain the materials for Talk a Lot courses. This book gives instructions and guidance for using the materials, which can be found in the existing two Talk a Lot course books. You can download the course books for free from <http://www.englishbanana.com>, or buy hard copy versions from any good bookseller. Downloadable course materials for Book 3 will be added to our website in stages, so please check back regularly to see what is available to download!

You can see how all of the different units and activities from the three Talk a Lot Elementary course books fit together on P.1.1.

As well as containing instructions about how to use Talk a Lot materials, this handbook also provides information sheets and practice worksheets to help students learn skills that will accelerate their improvement in spoken English:

- how to identify and use the techniques of connected speech (from p.11.1)
- how to identify and use sentence stress (from p.12.1)
- how to identify word stress (from p.13.1)
- how to identify prefixes (from p.14.1)
- how to identify suffixes (from p.15.1)
- how to identify compound nouns (from p.16.1)
- how to identify weak forms (from p.17.1)
- learn the sounds of English with the International Phonetic Alphabet (from p.18.1)
- how to identify vowel sounds (from p.18.19)

This handbook is not intended to be an exhaustive academic work. The aim was to write a brief, helpful guide and pack of resources that would provide a way into practise and language work in the classroom, rather than a dry, analytical manual. For example, I have deliberately avoided confusing jargon when writing about connected speech. Phrases like "bilabial plosive" and "palato-alveolar approximate" – though fun to say – can be studied later, or at the student's leisure. (See the bibliography on p.x for ideas about further reading.)

The sentence stress activities in this course are focused on neutral speech. Intonation is largely ignored – except where it concerns yes/no question forms – in favour of grounding students in the basics of word stress, sentence stress, and connected speech techniques. The subtleties of intonation, and how meaning can be altered, can of course be practised in conjunction with Talk a Lot materials, but should perhaps come later on for new students of spoken English, after they have mastered the techniques demonstrated in this handbook.

My aim in writing Talk a Lot materials is always to be as non-prescriptive as possible, so that users may take what they want from the work and use it in the way that best fits their situation. In my experience these materials are tried and tested and have been proven to work in the classroom.

If you have any questions after studying this handbook and the Talk a Lot course materials, please do feel free to get in touch with us, either by email at info@englishbanana.com, or via our feedback form at:

<http://www.englishbanana.com/contact.html>

As ever, we owe a big debt of gratitude to everybody who has been using Talk a Lot materials over the past year or so. Thanks for your feedback. It really helps! We've had lots of fun in the classroom with these lessons, and we hope that you will too! We'd love to hear from you about how you have used this book and how your course went, so please feel free to contact us. We'd also be really excited to hear about your ideas and proposals for new Talk a Lot topics and activities that we could include in future Talk a Lot materials.

With best wishes for a successful course,

Matt Purland, Ostróda, Poland (28th March 2009)

Talk a Lot

General Information

Course Outline

- Before the course begins perform an initial assessment with each student to check that they are at a suitable level for the course, and then enrol them onto the course. This course is aimed at students who are at a good elementary level or pre-intermediate level. For this course we recommend that there are no more than ten students per class.
- Before we start, the Talk a Lot course materials are designed to be flexible, and can be used in any way that you find suitable for your group or your needs. The course outline below is just an example, so please don't feel that you have to follow it to the letter!
- The course is divided into twelve three-hour lessons. The first ten lessons each have a different topic; while lesson 11 is intended for the revision of material studied over the ten weeks, and lesson 12 is reserved for the students' examinations and an end of course review. We recommend that you hold one lesson per week, making this a twelve week course comprising 30 guided learning hours, plus 6 hours of guided revision and examination. It's up to you what order you do the lessons in; you don't have to follow our order of topics!
- If your students need more than three hours of study per week, why not offer them two 3-hour lessons per week: one Talk a Lot lesson, as described below, and one lesson using traditional teaching methods, which include conventional reading, writing and grammar-based activities that could complement the intensive speaking and listening work of the Talk a Lot lessons. You could follow a standard EFL or ESL course book such as New English File or New Headway, using material that complements the Talk a Lot lesson, so, for example, if your Talk a Lot lesson was on the topic of Sport, you could use material from a traditional course book on the same topic for the second lesson. This would then give you a course with 60 guided learning hours.

General Information

- In our example lesson outline, each lesson lasts for three hours (180 teaching minutes). This can vary according to your needs, for example, in some English language classrooms one teaching hour is equal to 45 minutes, and so 3 teaching hours would be 2¼ hours. Or it may be that you have only 2 hours per week with your group of students. You can still use Talk a Lot activities to serve up a satisfying and stimulating lesson – just in a shorter timeframe.
- Each lesson focuses on a specific vocabulary topic. Books 1 and 2 each contain ten different topics, and Book 3 will also have 10 new topics. Book 3 also introduces several brand new activities – e.g. Multi-Purpose Texts – so that teachers now have an even greater variety of possible things to do in each lesson. For each lesson the teacher can now draw from twelve different activities in four practice categories:

Sentence Focus Activities:

- Sentence Blocks (C)
- Connected Sentence Cards
- Connected Speech Templates

Word Focus Activities:

- Discussion Words and Question Sheets
- Information Exchange
- Multi-Purpose Texts

Free Practice Activities:

- Discussion Questions
- Agree or Disagree?
- Role Plays
- Show and Tell (C)

Continuous Assessment Tests:

- Vocabulary Test (C)
- Lesson Test (C)

The activities marked with (C) are, we believe, core activities that should be included in every Talk a Lot lesson. Of course, it's up to you whether you want to do this! However, it is not necessary to use every activity in every lesson. There is far more material in each Talk a Lot unit than is needed to fill three hours of lesson time, so the teacher can mix and match, using different activities from different practice categories in different lessons, according to the needs of their learners. Similarly, it is not necessary to do the activities in the same order (as stated below) in every lesson, but better to mix things up each time so that students don't become used to a set lesson order.

The core activities provide a reassuring routine for each lesson. For example, at the beginning of each lesson students come together for the Vocabulary Test and Show and Tell, and at the end of the lesson for Q & A time, and a preview of the next lesson's topic.

- Bearing that in mind, here is an example of how you could structure a 3-hour long Talk a Lot lesson:

15 mins

C. A. Tests
CORE

Welcome and Vocabulary Test (see p.1.7) based on the previous lesson's topic. The teacher reads out the twenty words to the students in their native language and they write them in English. The teacher gives back lesson tests, discusses the answers with the students, and can also ask random questions from the previous lesson's sentence blocks to check how much the students have remembered.

15 mins

Free Practice
CORE

The teacher introduces the topic of this lesson, for example, "Music". Each student has to Show and Tell an item to do with this topic, e.g. for "Music" a student could bring a musical instrument, or a CD or poster, and then tell the class about it. This free practice activity is an easy warm-up for students, and a way into the lesson topic. The teacher also brings something to "show and tell", and then introduces the eight new Sentence Block starting sentences and wh- questions on the board or on the handout (see p.2.1). It is essential that the teacher checks that the students understand the sentences, so that they are meaningful to students when they practise them later on.

The teacher asks different students to model one or two of the sentence blocks, which will act as a reminder to students of how to make the sentence blocks.

20 mins

Students make the sentence blocks in pairs, for example, sitting back to back without eye contact. They don't write anything down and must not copy the sentence block starting sentences from the board. For this activity all the talk flows from the students making the sentence blocks from the starting sentences and wh- questions on the board or on the handout.

10 mins

Free Practice

Next, the teacher introduces the eight Discussion Questions for this lesson to the whole class (see p.8.1). Again, it is important that the teacher checks that their students understand the vocabulary that is used. Students should be encouraged to use their dictionaries to check new words.

30 mins

Working in pairs or small groups, students practise the discussion questions. This is free speaking practice – the antithesis of having to make pre-set sentences using the sentence blocks. The students can change partners several times in order to get a good variety of practice, then the whole class comes together and feeds back to the group, with the teacher asking additional follow-up questions. During this time the teacher removes the sentence block sentences from the board, or asks the students to return their sentence block handouts. This free practice session could be equally effective with the Agree or Disagree? activity (see p.9.1), or Role Plays (see p.10.1), instead of the Discussion Questions. You could vary what your students do lesson by lesson.

We're halfway through! Have a cup of tea and some fresh air – or just hang out!

25 mins

C. A. Tests
CORE

After a relaxing break it's time for some brain work – the Lesson Test (see page 1.8)! The aim of this test is for the teacher to find out what vocabulary the students can remember from the previous lesson and to get an idea of how well they are coping with making the sentence blocks.

25 mins

Word Focus

The next section is for word focus activities. The teacher could decide to use this slot for activities with the Discussion Words and Question Sheets (see p.5.1), for doing the Information Exchange (see p.6.1), or for working with the Multi-Purpose Texts (see p.7.1) – or you could base an activity on our handouts about word stress, suffixes, or compound nouns, etc. (see from p.11.1). Students could do a couple of different activities within the time allowed, depending on their level.

30 mins

Sentence Focus

The students practise the sentence block sentences again, but this time without any written record – nothing on the board and no handout. The teacher monitors each pair and helps them where necessary, making sure that they are making the sentence blocks successfully. Towards the end of this time the whole class comes back together to give each other feedback. The teacher asks questions from the eight sentence blocks to different students, who should give a correct, or nearly correct, sentence – all from memory. In the early weeks this will be more difficult for the students, but after a few lessons with this method students should be able to answer confidently, having memorised some or all of that lesson's sentence blocks. This section could be used for practising connected speech techniques, using either the Connected Sentence Cards (see p.3.1) or Connected Speech Templates (see p.4.1) – or both, if your students are really "getting it"! Another alternative would be to do an activity about sentence stress, using some of the material that starts on p.12.1.

10 mins

CORE

Open question time – students can ask any English-related question. The teacher looks at the students' workbooks (this can be any suitable course book that students work through at home and which complements the lesson) and checks students' progress. The teacher previews the topic for the next lesson and gives out the handouts for the next lesson's vocabulary test. The teacher could either give or spend a few minutes eliciting the twenty new words in the students' first language. The teacher should encourage students to keep all of their handouts in their own file, for revision and further study at home.

General Information

Assessment Methods, Tests, and Examination

The overall course mark for each student is reached by continuous assessment and an end of course oral examination. Individual students are monitored throughout the course and their progress recorded in a number of different ways. The aim of using continuous assessment is to encourage students to work hard in every lesson – because every lesson counts and effort is rewarded along with accuracy – and to work hard at home, e.g. learning the vocabulary words each week.

Each student gets a combined mark out of 80 for each lesson which is based on the following:

- vocabulary test: maximum of 20 marks
- lesson test: maximum of 40 marks
- student's lesson mark – accuracy: maximum of 10 marks
- student's lesson mark – effort: maximum of 10 marks

- total lesson mark: maximum of 80 marks

The lesson marks are added together on the individual Student Course Reports as the course progresses (see p.1.12 for a sample completed report, and p.1.11 for a blank template). Students don't have access to their lesson marks as they are added together, but they do see their marks for the vocabulary and lesson tests, as well as getting feedback on these tests and on their general performance each week.

Teachers should award marks out of 10 to each student for every lesson based on the level of their achievement during the lesson (accuracy) and their commitment during the lesson (effort). It goes without saying that teachers should strive to be wholly objective and not give in to favouritism when awarding these marks.

Over the ten lessons all of the lesson marks are added together to give an individual total for each student, to which is added the score from their final exam. This gives each student a grade for the whole course, ranging from A to U (ungraded fail):

- maximum lesson mark of 80 x 10 = 800 marks +
- maximum final exam mark of 100 =
- maximum course mark of 900 marks

Grade system:

Achievement:

Grade A = 800-900 marks

First Class

Grade B = 650-800 marks

Very Good

Grade C = 550-650 marks

Good

Grade D = 400-550 marks

Fair Pass

Grade E = 250-400 marks

Pass

Grade U = less than 250 marks

Fail

Grades A-E are passes. Grade U is ungraded and means that the student has failed the course. The student's grade is recorded on their course certificate, for example:

On p.1.12 you will find a sample completed course report for an above-average student, to give you an idea of how the marking on the course report works.

You could use one of the course certificate templates from this book (see pages 1.26-1.27), or create your own.

Lesson Assessment

During pair and group work the teacher monitors the students, checking and correcting grammar and vocabulary where necessary, e.g. during discussion question and role play rehearsals. In all free practice or word focus work the teacher should keep referring students back to the grammar that is being learned in the sentence focus activities, for example if a student says: “What you want?”, remind them that: “You must have a verb after a wh-question.” In this way the free practice and word focus work will help to consolidate what is being learned during the more structured practice of forming the sentence blocks, and studying sentence stress and the techniques of connected speech.

Written homework based on the topics and activities from each lesson could be given, checked and marked by the teacher. However, written work must be kept to a minimum during the lesson and students should not to write out full sentence blocks. This is Talk a Lot, after all! The students may instinctively begin to write down the starting sentences from the board, or make notes about the sentence blocks, but discourage this because it is a waste of lesson time in which they have a valuable opportunity to talk in English. The Talk a Lot method encourages students to use their memories as a learning tool and to activate the grammar that they already know when they join the course. When a student writes down the sentence blocks, they give full permission to their memory to forget this information, since they know it is safely recorded somewhere. Without the safety net of pen and paper students have to challenge themselves to work harder to make the sentence blocks (which are, after all, simply question forms and answers, based around individual verb forms). The time for writing out sentence blocks is at home, where students can write to their hearts' content! They also get a chance to see full sentence blocks in written form when they do the lesson test – once per lesson. As we have seen, the Talk a Lot certificate is based on marks gained during continuous assessment along with a final oral exam at the end of the course. Lesson assessment also includes more formal testing with regular vocabulary tests and lesson tests, the marks from which are added to each student's running total of marks. The teacher keeps track of each student's progress by adding the results of their tests and other marks to their individual Student Course Report.

Vocabulary Tests

All Talk a Lot tests should be run in exam conditions, with folders and dictionaries closed, no talking, and no copying. The vocabulary test could be held near the beginning of the lesson, as a way of quietening students down and getting them into study mode. We recommend that the teacher runs the vocabulary and lesson tests in the same positions during the lessons each time so as to give a sense of structure and routine to the tests which can be helpful for students. Teachers should try to mark the vocabulary tests during the lesson break and give students their results in the same lesson. The teacher keeps a record of each student's scores on their Student Course Report and measures progress made, as well as spending time during and between lessons addressing issues with individual students. There is a blank Vocabulary Test pro-forma on p.1.13, so that you (and your students) can build your own vocabulary tests.

Lesson Tests

The primary aim of the regular lesson test is to consolidate the work done during the previous lesson. If you run this test immediately after the break it will help to settle students down and get their minds focused again on learning English. Set a time limit of no more than 25 minutes and stick to it. As with the vocabulary tests, the aim of the lesson test is to check students' progress and both identify weaker students who may need extra support, e.g. help with making the sentence blocks, and identify stronger students who may need a greater challenge during lessons. For example, to maximise the effect of pair work the teacher could pair a stronger student with a weaker student.

Lesson tests are marked by the teacher after the lesson and the results given to students at the beginning of the next lesson, when there is time for a brief discussion of incorrect answers and other points raised by the test. The results from both tests enable the teacher to see not only who is paying attention during lessons, e.g. when making the sentence blocks, but also who is working at home: learning the vocabulary words, both meanings and spellings, and writing out sentence blocks.

At their discretion, a teacher may allow students who have missed a lesson to catch up on course marks by taking both tests at another time, e.g. after the present lesson. Or the teacher may decide that the student has missed the lesson and so cannot catch up on the marks, a scenario that will affect their final course score. However, if the latter applies the teacher should give the student in question the lesson materials to study at home in their own time, so that they don't miss out on course content.

Note: students can't do a Vocabulary Test or Lesson Test during their first Talk a Lot lesson, because there is no preceding unit, and they haven't had anything to prepare. The Vocabulary Test and Lesson Test for the first lesson's topic can be taken in week 11 (revision week), and the scores added to the students' lesson 1 scores on the course reports (in the boxes marked in bold).

Verb Forms Practice

These pages can be introduced by the teacher as extra worksheets at any time during the course if students are having problems with sentence blocks based on a particular verb form, or if they need more focused verb forms practice. A follow up activity would be for students to imagine their own sentence blocks based on particular verb forms, e.g. the teacher asks students to work in pairs and make four new sentence blocks using present perfect form – orally, without writing anything down.

In general, it's better for students to use a variety of different verb forms in a normal lesson, rather than studying a different verb form each lesson, because if a student misses one lesson they won't have missed out on studying a complete verb form.

End of Course Oral Examination

General Notes on the Examination

The Talk a Lot end of course exam is a one to one oral examination with the teacher reading the questions and the student answering. The exam should last for a maximum of 20 minutes. The exam is recorded onto tape and marked by the teacher afterwards. The results are added to the student's individual Student Course Report and then their overall course score and final grade can be calculated, which are then added to the student's certificate.

At no time should the student see the examination paper, whether before, during or after the examination. Nor should the student write down anything during the exam. The teacher writes the starting sentence and question word (printed in bold) on the board for each sentence block question.

If you are following the course in either Book 1 or Book 2, you could use the examination provided for the book you are using. (See p.1.14 for Examination #1 from Book 1 and p.1.18 for Examination #2 from Book 2.) If you have built your own course by using a variety of units from Books 1-3, you could build your own examination as well, by taking questions from each topic that you have used. Use the ready-made examinations from Books 1 and 2 to guide you when devising the questions.

During the examination the teacher should not prompt the student for answers or help them in any way, apart from to explain the instructions so that the student understands what they have to do. Students may not use a dictionary during this examination.

At the end of the course the teacher could give a prize to the student (or students) with:

- the best course score overall
- the best vocabulary test grades overall
- the best lesson test grades overall
- the best attendance record
- the most improved student (comparing the beginning with the end of the course)

Marking Guide

There are four kinds of question that form the examination:

1. Make sentence blocks (e.g. questions 1, 5, 9, and 13 in Examination #2)

The maximum score is 8 marks. Students score one mark for each fully correct line, with correct intonation and sentence stress, and one mark for naming the correct verb form. Students get only half a mark if the intonation and/or sentence stress of a line is incorrect. In the last two lines of each sentence block the answers will vary as students have to change part of the original information to produce a negative answer. Accept any answer that is grammatically correct and makes sense within the given context.

Don't penalise students for making contractions, or not making them. For example, if the answer on the examination paper says "No, he doesn't", but the student says "No, he does not", don't mark them down. It is still an accurate answer.

2. Answer discussion questions (e.g. questions 3, 7, 10 and 14 in Examination #2)

Students can score up to a maximum of 4 points for each question based on the following criteria:

The student should answer the question and speak for approximately 1 minute:

- | | |
|----------|--|
| 4 marks: | the student produces sentences which are completely or almost completely correct in terms of grammar, pronunciation, intonation, and sentence stress. There are between 0-2 errors. Excellent use of vocabulary and interesting subject matter |
| 3 marks: | the student produces sentences which are good in terms of grammar, pronunciation, intonation, and sentence stress, but there are between 3-4 errors. Good use of vocabulary |
| 2 marks: | the student produces sentences which can be understood in terms of grammar, pronunciation, intonation, and sentence stress, but there are many errors |
| 1 mark: | the student attempts to answer the question, but not using full sentences nor correct grammar, pronunciation, intonation, and sentence stress. Part of their answer can be clearly understood, but there are many errors |
| 0 marks: | the student has not attempted the question or the answer is incoherent |

The teacher should make a note in the box provided of several examples of the student's performance, including errors as well as correct structures.

3. State ten vocabulary words on a given topic (e.g. questions 4, 6, 11 and 15 in Examination #2)

When students have to list ten vocabulary words, the teacher could keep a tally in the box provided, e.g. IIII IIII ... Give a half mark in the event of wrong word stress or incorrect intonation and/or pronunciation. When stating ten different vocabulary words the student cannot include the example word which is given in the question.

4. Answer discussion word questions (e.g. questions 2, 8, 12 and 16 in Examination #2)

The answers and marks for these questions are provided on the examination paper. Give a half mark in the event of wrong word stress or incorrect intonation and/or pronunciation.

(Note: see p.1.22 for a sample examination paper that has been completed by the teacher during a Talk a Lot oral examination with a pre-intermediate level student.)

Talk a Lot

How to Use

Sentence Blocks – Instructions

Designed specifically for the Talk a Lot course, the sentence block method is a brand new way to teach English grammar with speaking practice. The main benefit of this method is that the students have to do all of the work. They must listen, think hard, and remember. They must produce eight sentences, both positive and negative, using a given verb form, and two different question forms, using wh- questions and questions with auxiliary verbs. They must produce the eight sentences based on a given starting sentence and a given wh- question word, using a pre-agreed set of rules. When they are working on the sentence blocks students are speaking and memorising correct English. They are learning to use key verb forms in English, forming questions and responses organically as they focus all their attention on making the sentence blocks successfully. They are also learning new vocabulary and have to produce their own ideas to make the last two negative sentences work.

So what is a sentence block and how do you make one? A sentence block is a group of eight consecutive sentences, made up of seven lines, that forms a two-way conversation. There are strict rules governing how a sentence block must be made, which students should learn.

At the beginning of the course:

The students receive two handouts explaining the basic terminology used when talking about sentence blocks and some helpful rules for making them (see pp.2.8-2.9). The teacher should spend time discussing these pages with the students, in particular explaining:

- When we use each of the eight verb forms that are explored during the course
- What we mean by subject-verb “inversion”
- How auxiliary verbs are used, and the rule for using “do” as an auxiliary verb

In the first lesson or two the teacher will need to train the students to make the seven lines that form a sentence block. In the ensuing lessons students should be able to form the sentence blocks themselves, based on the given sentences on the board or handout. It is very important that in each lesson the teacher ensures that students understand the vocabulary used in the sentence blocks before they are let loose on the task of making them.

This is an example of how an individual student could be coached to form a sentence block for the first time. When coaching groups, ask a different student for each of the lines.

The teacher has written the first starting sentence on the board; for example, this one from the “Music” lesson in Book 2:

We saw a great jazz concert at the Palace Theatre last night.

The teacher:

OK, we’re going to make a sentence block. There are seven lines in a sentence block and eight different sentences. [Pointing to the board at the starting sentence.] This is the first line. Can you read it for me, please? [The student reads it out loud.] Do you understand this sentence?

The student:

Yes.

How to Use

Sentence Blocks – Instructions

The teacher:

OK. [Writes “Where” underneath the starting sentence.] To make the second line can you ask a “where” question based on the starting sentence?

The student:

Where did you see a great jazz concert last night?

The teacher:

Good. Very good. Excellent.

Note: if a student has a problem producing any part of the sentence block, the teacher should prompt them with the first word, then the next, and in this way “coax” the sentence out of them by, if necessary, saying the whole sentence and getting the student to say it with them, then to repeat it without the teacher’s help.

The teacher:

And what is the short answer?

The student:

At the Palace Theatre.

The teacher:

OK. Great.

Note: it is very important that the teacher praises the student as they get sentences right and gently encourages them when they have taken a wrong turn. It is also important for the teacher to keep the momentum going so that the sentence block is made with a sense of rhythm and an almost urgent pace. This will keep the student focused and thinking about the task in hand.

The teacher:

So now we’ve got three lines. Can you repeat them for me? [The student does so correctly.] Now, let’s get to five lines. Ask a question with inversion.

The student:

Did you see a great jazz concert at the Palace Theatre last night?

The teacher:

Good. And the short answer?

The student:

Yes.

The teacher:

Yes, what?

The student:

Yes, we did.

How to Use

Sentence Blocks – Instructions

The teacher:

Good. Very good. So now we've got five lines. We're almost there. Can you repeat the five lines, please? [The student does so correctly.] OK, so, to complete the sentence block, let's ask the same kind of question with inversion but this time to get a negative answer. Look at the question word. Focus on the "where". Change the "where" to get a negative answer.

The student:

Did you see a great jazz concert at the Roxy last night?

The teacher:

And give a short answer in the negative.

The student:

No, we didn't.

The teacher:

Then a full negative answer. The last line is made up of two negative sentences.

The student:

We didn't see a great jazz concert at the Roxy last night.

Note: students have to invent something here ("...at the Roxy last night?") that makes sense in the same context. They should try to think of a sensible option to get a negative answer. For example, the teacher must not accept: "Did you see a great jazz concert at the newsagent's last night?" because it doesn't make sense. Students often struggle to remember to make two negative sentences for the last line. Encourage them and stress the two negative sentences.

The teacher:

Excellent! Now tell me all seven lines...

Throughout, the teacher should help the student to achieve the correct pronunciation, sentence and word stress (see sections 12 and 13 of this handbook), rhythm and intonation. If a student makes a mistake during a line, ask them to repeat the whole line again. Of course, in the example above the student has given almost all of the correct answers straight away. This is purely to serve a purpose in this handbook – to give a clear example of what the students should aim for. The teacher should also encourage the students to think about word and sentence stress and to emphasise the correct words in each sentence, for example:

Did you see a great jazz concert at the Palace Theatre last night?

Yes, we did.

Did you see a great jazz concert at the Roxy last night?

No, we didn't. We didn't see a great jazz concert at the Roxy last night.

Students may have a tendency to try to say all seven lines with a questioning intonation at the end of each line. For example, they might say:

How to Use

Sentence Blocks – Instructions

The student:

Did you see a great jazz concert at the Roxy last night? No, we didn't?

Ask them to think about the meaning of what they are saying and to make definite statements without the questioning intonation. Some students may try to gabble and deliver their lines very quickly without apparent thought of what they mean – wholly focused on their goal of remembering each line and forming the sentence blocks as quickly as possible. Ask them to slow down and to focus on what each sentence means.

So, in the example above the seven lines and eight sentences of the sentence block are:

1. We saw a great jazz concert at the Palace Theatre last night. (starting sentence)
2. Where did you see a great jazz concert last night? (wh- question)
3. At the Palace Theatre. (short answer)
4. Did you see a great jazz concert at the Palace Theatre last night? (question with inversion)
5. Yes, we did. (short answer)
6. Did you see a great jazz concert at the Roxy last night? (question with inversion to get a negative answer)
7. No, we didn't. We didn't see a great jazz concert at the Roxy last night. (two sentences – a short negative answer and a long negative answer)

The teacher should ensure that the students follow the sentence block structure and that they recap each group of sentences after the 3rd and 5th lines. If a student has a tendency to “Um...” and “Er...” their way through each line, challenge them to say the lines without doing this. As they monitor the pairs engaged in making the sentence blocks – saying one line each – the teacher will sometimes need to be firm with the students, and ask them to keep focused when it looks as though their minds are beginning to wander, and of course the teacher also needs to keep focused! For example, when leading sentence block practice at the front of the class, the teacher will need to be one step ahead of the students and know the next sentence in their mind – what they want the student to produce – before the student produces it.

Embedded Grammar

In each lesson students will practise making positive sentences, negative sentences, and two different kinds of question forms using the following verb forms:

- present simple
- present continuous
- past simple
- past continuous
- present perfect
- modal verbs (e.g. can, should, must, have to, etc.)
- future forms (with “will” and “going to”)
- first conditional

How to Use

Sentence Blocks – Instructions

While doing sentence block practice the students may be unaware that they are using eight different verb forms. It is better not to focus on this and blow their minds with grammar, but instead make sure that the students are making the sentence blocks correctly. For example, it is essential that students understand the eight starting sentences on the board or handout at the beginning of the lesson, and also know how to make a sentence block, before they begin pair work with a partner.

The starting sentences all contain embedded grammar, which means grammar that occurs as a natural part of the sentence block as it is being spoken and automatically memorised, rather than grammar that is explicitly presented to students as an isolated grammar topic, such as: “In today’s lesson we are going to study wh- questions...” etc. The embedded grammar in the sentence blocks at Elementary level includes:

- positive and negative forms
- use of articles
- use of auxiliary verbs
- a variety of main verbs in each unit
- subject and object pronouns
- yes/no questions
- wh- questions
- active and passive sentences
- punctuation marks
- prepositions of place and time
- some/any
- singular/plural
- nouns: common, proper, abstract, countable, uncountable, etc.
- intensifiers – too, really, very, completely, etc.
- use of infinitives
- adjectives
- adverbs of frequency and manner
- possessive pronouns
- determiners – this, that, those, these, etc.
- there is/there are
- formal and informal situations
- use of gerunds
- comparatives and superlatives
- relative clauses – that, which, who, where, etc.

The teacher could pick up on any or all of these grammar topics in more detail if they run the course as a 60-hour course (see Course Outline on p.1.2).

Miscellaneous Notes

- As well as with students in groups and pairs, this method can also be used successfully with students on a one to one basis, with the teacher prompting the student to produce the sentence blocks, first with the sentences on the board or handout, and later from memory.

How to Use

Sentence Blocks – Instructions

- Teachers (or students) can also imagine their own starting sentences based on the verb form or vocabulary that they wish to practise (see blank template on p.2.7).

Different Ways to Practice Forming Sentence Blocks

- In a circle – the teacher or a student leads and chooses each student in turn to form the complete sentence block.
- The students sit back to back in pairs and say one line each, then reverse who starts.
- The students chant a complete sentence block altogether as a group.
- The students say one line or one word each, going around the group in a circle.
- The teacher says a random line from a sentence block and asks a student to produce the next line.

Note: every sentence block can be said or chanted in a continuous way by adding an eighth line at the end that begins with “So...” and continues with the question on line 2. For example:

Line 1: Joanne can play the saxophone really well.

Line 2: Who can play... [etc.]

Line 7: No, he can't. George can't play the saxophone really well.

Line 8: So, who can play... [then, continuing with line 3, “Joanne can.” and so on...]

Sentence Blocks – Q & A

Q: What is a sentence block?

A: A sentence block is a group of eight consecutive sentences, made up of seven lines, that forms a two-way conversation. It consists of positive and negative sentences, and two question forms – a wh- question and two questions with inversion (“yes-no” questions).

Q: What is a starting sentence?

A: The first sentence in a sentence block.

Q: What is a wh- question word?

A: A question word that begins with “wh-”. For example, “what”, “where”, “when”, “who”, “why”, “whose”, and “which”. “How” is also a wh- question word because it contains the letters “w” and “h”. Wh- questions are asked to obtain information, rather than a “yes” or “no” answer. They have a falling intonation, which means that the tone of your voice does not go up at the end of the question, as it does with “yes-no” questions.

Q: What is a question with inversion?

A: Also known as a “yes-no” question, because the answer is usually “yes” or “no”, a question with inversion is a question where the subject and verb have been swapped around (or “inverted”). They always start with an auxiliary verb (be, have, or do), a modal auxiliary verb (e.g. can, will, must, should, etc.), or verb “to be”. For example, this sentence is a statement: “John is a DJ”. To make this statement into a question with inversion we need to swap around the verb (“is”) and the subject (“John”) to make: “Is John a DJ?” Questions with inversion always have a rising intonation, which means that the tone of your voice has to go up at the end of the question.

Q: What is an auxiliary verb?

A: Auxiliary verbs are helping verbs. They don’t have any meaning of their own in the sentence, but they help the main verb to form a verb phrase. For example, in this sentence: “Jean was riding her horse in the field for half an hour this morning”, “was” is an auxiliary verb (from verb “to be”) which works together with the main verb “riding” to make the past continuous verb form. There are three primary auxiliary verbs in English: “be”, “have” and “do”, as well as modal auxiliary verbs such as “can”, “will” and “must”.

Q: What is each of the eight verb forms used for?

A: The uses of the verb forms studied during this course can be summarised as follows:

Present Simple:	to talk about regular actions and things that are always true
Past Simple:	to talk about completed actions in the past
Present Continuous:	to talk about what is happening at the moment
Past Continuous:	to talk about continuous actions in the past: what was happening when...
Present Perfect:	to talk about past actions which are quite recent or relevant to now
Modal Verbs:	to talk about permission, possibilities, ability, and probability
Future Forms:	to talk about future plans, predictions and intentions
First Conditional:	to talk about what will happen if a certain condition is met

Sentence Blocks – Six Great Tips for Students

1. During each lesson we work with the same verb forms in the same order. Look for patterns. Each lesson try to apply what you have learnt in previous lessons.

2. After a "wh" question or phrase (such as "What time...?" or "How long...?") there must follow an auxiliary verb or main verb "to be".

3. Questions with inversion always start with an auxiliary verb or main verb "to be".

4. In questions with inversion the subject of the sentence must follow the auxiliary verb.

5. If there is either auxiliary verb be or have in the starting sentence, use it to make the questions and answers that follow. If there isn't, you must use do as an auxiliary verb to make the questions and answers.

6. Use as much of the starting sentence in the resulting questions and answers as you can.

Connected Sentence Cards – Instructions

Packs of connected sentence cards have eight sentence block sentences on them – with one word on each card. The aim of the cards is for students to learn about:

- a) sentence building: how to make a sentence; the order in which we put the words
- b) sentence stress: which words are content words and which are function words
- c) connected speech: how we join together the words in a sentence; how we connect the sound at the end of one word with the sound at the beginning of the next word

There are lots of ways in which you could use these cards, some of which are suggested here. There is also a detailed lesson plan on p.3.3 which outlines how to use the cards to teach the techniques of connected speech. From p.3.6 there is a detailed demonstration of how you could use the cards to teach connected speech by focusing on the vowel and consonant sounds that occur between words in a sentence.

First of all, print the cards (on thin card, if possible). If you are able to laminate them, that would be ideal, because you will be able to use the same set of cards again and again!

Ideas for using the connected sentence cards:

- Ask students to work in pairs or groups to put together the cards to make the sentence. You could give one sentence (of the eight sentence block starting sentences) to each pair or group in the class; when they have finished their task, tell them to go and help put together the other sentences
- Mix up all of the cards from a set of eight sentences and ask students to put words into groups according to the kind of word, e.g. nouns, adjectives, main verbs, auxiliary verbs, and so on. Elicit from them which kinds of words are content words and which are function words (see p.12.1)
- Get students to write their own starting sentences. Check them for accuracy, then ask students to make their own connected sentence cards using the blank template on p.3.2. Then, they swap their sentence (or sentences) with another group and try to solve the sentence(s) that they get in return
- Follow the detailed lesson plan on p.3.3
- Use the demo (from p.3.6) as a guide for building lessons that explore connected speech

Connected Sentence Cards – Sample Lesson Plan

Activity Type:	Discovery; learn the techniques of connected speech
Level:	Elementary - Pre-Intermediate
Skills:	Vocabulary; Speaking & Listening; Pronunciation; Stress
Class Size:	Students work in pairs or small groups with a maximum of six in a group. This lesson also works well with individual students in a one to one situation
Time:	1 hour
Aim:	To learn the techniques of connected speech
Materials:	1 set of eight cut-up sentences per six students (or one cut-up sentence per pair/small group, depending on the level of your students and what they can handle!), whiteboard and pens; students have their notebooks and pens

(Note: you could teach exactly the same content and concepts using the connected speech templates (see p.4.1). However, the cards give a more tactile experience (which is great for students who learn through physically doing something) and allow students to put together the sentences and identify the content and function words, i.e. to start the whole process at the beginning, whereas the connected speech templates do not.)

Procedure

1. Students should be in small groups – six per set of connected sentence cards. Give out the sets of cards, with each sentence in a separate group. Students put all the cards face up on the table. Ask them to put the words into order to make the sentences and tell you what verb form is used, e.g. “Present Simple” or “Future Forms”.
2. One student from each group writes one (or more) of the sentences on the board. Elicit any spelling corrections from the group. Let’s say, for example, that one of the sentences that students have unjumbled is this one from the “Money” topic in Book 3:

Roger is paying his gas bill and electricity bill at the post office.

Different students read all the sentences aloud. Check the students’ understanding of meaning, sentence and word stress, and pronunciation (what they naturally produce).

3. Students identify content words and move the cards up so that they stand out. The words on the table in front of the students will look something like this:

content words:	Roger	paying	gas	bill	electricity	bill	post	office.
function words:		is	his	and		at	the

4. Students identify how many syllables there are in each content word, e.g.

no. of syllables:

2 2 1 1 5 1 1 2

Roger paying gas bill electricity bill post office.

is his and at the

5. Students identify the strong stressed syllable in each content word of more than one syllable. Every word in English has one strong stress, which is always on a vowel sound. See example sentence below. Students could use a dictionary to look at the IPA stress marks, if required. They should consider features such as suffixes, compound nouns, weak stresses, contractions, and stress patterns. Highlight this information on the board, so that students become aware of rules that can help them to identify word stress. Highlight patterns, e.g. compound nouns almost always have the stress on the first syllable. (See “Focus on Connected Speech”, sections 11-17 for more information and activities.)

6. Students identify the vowel sound of each strong stressed syllable, using symbols from the IPA chart (see p.18.6). For example:

The sound spine of the sentence: vowel sounds on the stressed syllables of content words:

/ɒ/ /eɪ/ /æ/ /ɪ/ /ɪ/ /ɪ/ /əʊ/ /ɒ/

(Rog)er (pay)ing gas bill elec(tric)ity bill post (off)ice.

is his and at the

Practise saying the vowel sound patterns out loud with your students:

/ɒ/ /eɪ/ /æ/ /ɪ/ /ɪ/ /ɪ/ /əʊ/ /ɒ/

Highlight that this is the “sound spine” of the sentence. This sequence of vowel sounds is the “distilled essence” of the spoken sentence. It’s what we need to hear if we are to understand the sentence. For example, it’s much easier to understand the speaker if the vowel sounds are correct but the consonant sounds are wrong, than the other way round (see example on p.4.3).

7. Students identify how to link from one stressed syllable to the next, using the techniques of connected speech (see p.11.3). Notice how function words are squashed and mashed up between the strong stressed syllables. Students practise saying the sentences using connected speech.

8. Elicit from students the following conclusions:

If a listener can't understand your spoken English, it could be because:

- a) you're saying the wrong vowel sound on a stressed syllable
- b) you're stressing the wrong syllable in a word
- c) you're stressing too many syllables in a word
- d) you're not stressing any syllables in a word
- e) you're not connecting together words in a sentence
- f) you're not giving stronger stress in a sentence to content words over function words
- g) all of the above (I really hope not!)

Consolidation

Connected Sentence Cards – Sound Connections Demo

Here's a demo of an interesting classroom activity in which you could use the connected sentence cards to teach connected speech techniques, by focusing on the sound – vowel or consonant – at the beginning and end of each word, and visualising the connection that occurs between them. Simply print the cards onto paper or card and give one set of sentences (all or just a few, or just one) to each small group of students. Students have to decide whether the sound at the beginning and at the end of each word is either a vowel or a consonant sound. If it's a vowel sound, they leave the box white. If it's a consonant sound, they colour in the box. (If students are not sure whether the sound is a vowel or a consonant sound, they could use a dictionary to look at the phonetic spelling of the word, which will provide the answer.)

There are only four possible kinds of connection (see also p. 4.4 of this handbook):

a) vowel sound to consonant sound (vc): /'dʒɒn.i'deɪp/
b) consonant sound to vowel sound (cv): /'wɒtʃ.ə/
c) vowel sound to vowel sound (vv): /'sɪ.nə.mə.rɒn/
d) consonant sound to consonant sound (cc): /æ?ðə/

In a quick survey of eight sentence block starting sentences, we counted 94 different connections between words. The most common connections were:

1. consonant sound to consonant sound (cc) – 46 connections = 48% (the most by far)
2. vowel sound to consonant sound (vc) – 28 connections = 30%
3. vowel sound to vowel sound (vv) – 11 connections = 12%
4. consonant sound to vowel sound (cv) – 9 connections = 10%

This pie chart shows the percentages of each kind of connection:

As they do the activity, students will find the following outcomes:

- vowel sound to consonant sound (vc) and
- consonant sound to vowel sound (cv)

If either of these connections occurs, the sounds will flow well together. For example:

This is because in rapid speech the English tongue is able to easily produce a smooth transition between consonant and vowel sounds, and vice versa. This technique of connected speech is called linking.

- vowel sound to vowel sound (vv)

If you see this kind of connection, there will be a new sound added – /j/, /w/, or /r/. For example:

Talk a Lot

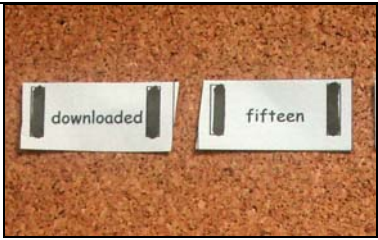

How to Use

Connected Sentence Cards – Sound Connections Demo

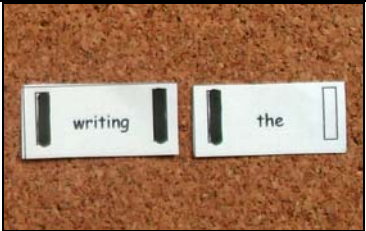

This is because in rapid speech the English tongue can't cope with two vowels flowing together, so we have to introduce a consonant sound between them, making the connection just like either (vc) or (cv) (see above). This technique of connected speech, where we add a new sound, is called intrusion.

a) consonant sound to consonant sound (cc)

If you see this kind of connection, you should stop and think about how the sounds go together. It's very common in rapid speech for consonant sounds not to flow well together. Say the words on the cards together and listen to the connecting sounds. It's likely that a sound will be missing at the end of the first word, especially if that sound is /t/, or /d/. This technique of connected speech, where a sound disappears, is called elision. For example:

/ˈmʌsˈrent/ /t/ at the end of the first word disappears to make the transition between the two words easier to say (elision)	/daʊnˈləʊ.dəˈfɪf.ti:n/ /d/ at the end of the first word disappears to make the transition between the two words easier to say (elision)

In addition to this, the sound that disappears may be replaced by a glottal stop, which is a very short pause. Or the sound at the end of the first word may change to make the next sound – at the beginning of the next word – easier to say, for example /ŋ/ at the end of “-ing” words often changes to /n/. In other words, we “drop” the “g”. This technique of connected speech, where a sound changes, is called assimilation.

/ˈləʊˈbʌʔ.dʒɪˈhɒ.rə/ /t/ at the end of the first word is replaced by a glottal stop /ʔ/ to make the transition between the two words easier to say (glottal stops)	/ˈraɪ.tɪn.ðə/ /ŋ/ at the end of the first word changes to /n/ to make the transition between the two words easier to say (assimilation)	/ɒnˈvæ.lən.taɪnz/ /n/ at the end of the first word changes to /m/ to make the transition between the two words easier to say (assimilation)

If two of the same consonant sounds meet, the first sound will become redundant and disappear, for example:

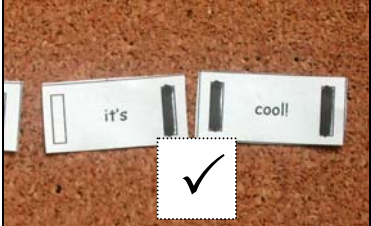

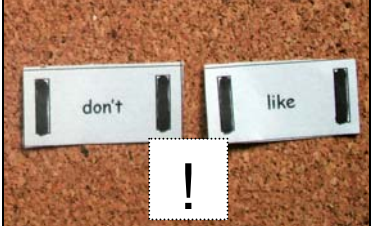

Talk a Lot

How to Use

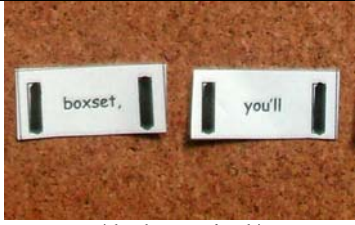

Connected Sentence Cards – Sound Connections Demo

/k/ meets /k/ so the first sound disappears (elision)	/k/ meets /k/ so the first sound disappears (elision)	/s/ meets /s/ so the first sound (along with /d/) disappears (elision)

Sometimes, however, the consonant-consonant (cc) sounds will flow together well. Students will see this very clearly if the consonant sound at the end of the first word is /s/ or /z/ (see examples below). Why does this happen? Because after making these sounds, your mouth and tongue are in a fairly neutral position and ready to make any sound. Try saying /s/ and /z/ separately now. Where is your tongue? Where are your lips? In what position does your mouth end up after saying each sound? Now try saying the words below together. Compare this to saying /t/, or any word with /t/ at the end. After saying /t/ your tongue is right behind your teeth, fully committed to the sound, and in a bad starting position to make the next sound.

/s/ meets /k/ and they flow together smoothly (linking)	/z/ meets /d/ and they flow together smoothly (linking)	/t/ meets /l/ and they don't flow together smoothly, so /t/ is automatically omitted by the speaker (elision)

Having said all of this, sometimes there will be no connection between the two sounds because of the natural break, or pause, provided by a punctuation mark, such as a dash –, semi-colon ;, or comma ,, for example:

/'bɒk.set.ju:l/
here two consonant sounds meet – /t/ and /j/ – but there is a natural break in the speech provided by the comma, so /t/ remains and elision doesn't happen

Students should try using the connected sentence cards to explore the different sound connections between pairs of words, and how connected speech techniques come into play each time. They could also try this method with any sentence – one that they have written themselves, or one from a newspaper, book, or magazine, using the template below to help them. The outcomes will be generally the same as those shown above.

Total:	16

Another helpful technique is to study and learn connections that occur often, in phrases that are common in spoken English – and particularly in phrases that comprise unstressed function words. For example:

/əʔ.ðə/

/gəʊ.wɪn.tə/

/t/ at the end of the first word disappears to make the transition between the two words easier to say (elision), and is replaced by a glottal stop.

when used as a future form, these three syllables are said quickly because they are unstressed function words. /ŋ/ at the end of the first word changes to /n/ to make the transition between the two words easier to say (assimilation). Often this very common phrase is shortened even further to “gunna”: /gʌn.ə/. This enables the speaker to get even more quickly to the point of what they’re trying to say, i.e. the active verb: “I’m gunna buy...” etc.

Connected Sentence Cards – Sound Connections Demo

Once students have understood sound connections between words, and how the techniques of connected speech are employed, they should combine this knowledge with work that they have done on sentence stress (see from page 12.1) to form natural-sounding English speech, for example:

/'deɪ.zi.jən.ə'bɔɪ.frend.ə.gəʊ.wɪn.tə'wɒtʃ.ə
rəʊ'mæn.tɪ'kɒ.mə.di.jəʔ.ðə'sɪ.nə.mə.rɒm'væ.lən.taɪnz'deɪ/

In this picture we have visualised the complete sentence, with all of the sound connections between the words highlighted by the black and white bars. You can also see the sentence stress, with the content words (Daisy, boyfriend, watch, romantic, comedy, cinema, Valentine's, and Day) raised above the function words (and, her, are, going, to, a, at, the, on). Students could also identify the stressed syllable with its accompanying vowel sound in each of the content words, and write them on the cards (as we have indicated above). Students should practise saying the sentence out loud again and again, whilst focusing on three things:

1. The stressed syllables
2. The vowel sounds on the stressed syllables
3. The different connections between the words

Students could also spend time working with the connected speech templates (see page 4.1), which pull together all of this work into one activity.

Towards the end of this activity, students could try putting together cards that make different sound combinations, to test the outcomes demonstrated above. They shouldn't worry about the resultant phrases making sense, but instead focus entirely on how the sounds go together (see examples below). A good extension would be for students to write and practise saying two-word phrases that do make sense, and which highlight each of the following categories:

- (vv) – connected with /j/ e.g. "high ice"
- (vv) – connected with /w/ e.g. "through everything"
- (vv) – connected with /r/ e.g. "here anyway"
- (cc) – where /t/ at the end disappears (elision) e.g. "hit back"
- (cc) – where /d/ at the end disappears (elision) e.g. "red car"
- (cc) – where /s/ or /z/ at the end enables a smooth transition e.g. "wise guy"
- (cc) – where the same sounds meet and the first is cancelled out e.g. "in need" [etc.]

Connected Sentence Cards – Going Further

If the aim of spoken English is to communicate clearly and efficiently, the techniques of connected speech are there to help us do that. But what effect do they have? Put simply, they ensure that all the lumps and bumps in a sentence – the (vv) and (cc) sound connections – are removed. For example, if we visualise the beginning and end sounds of each word in part of this sentence we get the following image:

Doing this allows us to see exactly where all the “lumps and bumps” are – all of the (vv) and (cc) connections. At Point A, we have to make a consonant “bridge” between the two vowel sounds /i/ and /ə/. We do this by inserting a consonant sound between them – /j/ – so that we go from the awkward (vv) connection to (vc), which is much easier to say (intrusion).

At Point B, two consonant sounds meet – /l/ and /h/ – with the result that we lose the /d/ sound from the first word, and also the /h/ from the beginning of the next word (elision). From Point B to Point C, all of the sound connections between the words are either (vc) or (cv), so the sentence flows well. At Point D the two consonant sounds – /ŋ/ and /t/ – crunch together, so the /ŋ/ of “going” is changed to /n/ to make the transition easier to say (assimilation). Then, up to Point E the sentence again flows smoothly, with (vc) and (cv) connections, until a clash occurs between two of the same hard consonant sounds: /k/ and /k/. We remove the first /k/ (elision), so that a (vc) connection is created, then continue to Point F, where there is a problem between two vowel sounds: /i/ and /ə/. We smooth things out by automatically inserting a consonant sound – /j/, creating a (vc) connection instead of (cc), just like we did at the beginning of the sentence (intrusion).

Another conflict between sounds occurs almost immediately, when /t/ and /ð/ crash up against each other. It’s a simple problem to solve, and we do it by removing /t/ at the end of the first word and inserting a glottal stop (elision and glottal stops), which creates a (vc) connection. Let’s see the effect that using the techniques of connected speech has had on smoothing out the sentence. Compare the image above to the following one:

Talk a Lot

How to Use

Connected Sentence Cards – Going Further

Apart from one connection (“going to”), all of the thirteen connections have been transformed into either (vc) or (cv) connections, whereas in the original version there were six sound connections which didn't flow together easily – because they were either (vv) or (cc). As a result, the sentence is much easier to say quickly (rapid speech), whilst nothing has been lost in terms of clarity or meaning.

Is the aim of connected speech, then, to smooth out everything we say into a series of (vcvcvcvc) sound connections between words? What about taking this to its logical conclusion and insisting on (vc) and (cv) connections between all syllables in a sentence? Is that possible? If it were we would all be speaking like babies:

ma	ma	ma	ma	ma	ma	ma	ma	ma	ma	ma	ma	ma	maaaaa!
/mæ/	/mæ/	/mæ/	/mæ/	/mæ/	/mæ/	/mæ/	/mæ/	/mæ/	/mæ/	/mæ/	/mæ/	/mæ/	/'mæ/or girl-group singers:

doo	waa	doo	doo	waa	duh	doo	waa	doo	doo	waa	duh	doo	waaaaah!

Unfortunately, it's not possible to speak English using only (vc) or (cv) connections (*see p.3.19 below), because we need words rather than just sounds to communicate our thoughts, actions, and ideas, and most words in English either end or start with a consonant sound. That is why there are far more (cc) connections than any other kind (see p.3.6). We begin to "speak" as babies by making (vc) and (cv) connections between syllables ("ma-ma", "ga-ga", "la-la", etc.) – after all, the first "word" for most babies is said to be "da-da"¹ – but we soon move on to more difficult sound connections. Similarly, when we first begin to "write" as babies, we do whatever we find easiest – i.e. draw a squiggly line on a piece of paper (or the wall!) – then gradually progress on to printing individual letters, that express sounds, then to printing words, that express sounds which have meaning. When we've mastered printing words together in a line – a sentence – we're encouraged by our teachers to begin joining together the words (as well as the letters within words) – as joined-up handwriting. This enables us to write – to express ourselves and communicate – far more quickly.

But it's still important that the joined-up writing is legible (doctors, please take note) – just as it's important in connected speech that, although we can lose sounds from words, we shouldn't lose whole words when we're speaking quickly. As you can see, there is a parallel here with zero beginner learners who are just starting to speak English. First, they tentatively make the sounds of English – the vowels, diphthongs, and consonants – and the sounds of individual letters of the alphabet. Then they put together sounds to make words – sounds with meaning. Then words together in a line – a sentence, which carries more complicated layers of meaning. Finally, they begin to connect together the words in a sentence – focusing on the vowel and consonant sounds at the beginning and ends of words – connected speech. They have also learned to use sentence stress and weak forms (see from p.12.1 onwards), and have therefore learned to speak English – to communicate – quickly and efficiently.

Additionally, different combinations of words and sounds throw up different kinds of connections. The aim of connected speech is to try to mimic the (vc) and (cv) kinds of connection as far as possible, by either adding new sounds, taking away unnecessary sounds, or changing sounds.

Let's demonstrate this by reading some one-syllable words together out loud quickly, that have starting and ending sounds that fit into the four different kinds of sound connections. You're not allowed to use any of the techniques of connected speech to make the words easier to say together, except for linking; so

*If you don't believe me, try it yourself. Try to write a sentence (that makes sense!) where the connection between every single syllable is either (vc) or (cv). It's much harder than it looks! It's more feasible – and fun – to write short groups of syllables (i.e. words) that show this, for example:

Countries of the World

Mo	ro	cco
/mə/	/rɒ/	/kəʊ/

U	ru	guay
/'juə/	/rə/	/gwaɪ/

Pa	na	ma

Conclusion

In this third and final version of our original text, we can see a more extreme use of linking, intrusion, elision, glottal stops, and assimilation – as well as correct use of sentence stress and weak forms* – that reduces the sentence to only (cv) connections between syllables:

•	Day	zee	yuh	nuh	•	boy	fre	duh	guh	nuh	•	wo	chuh	roe	•	ma	ti
	/'deɪ/	/zi/	/jə/	/nə/		/'bɔɪ/	/fre/	/də/	/gə/	/nə/		/'wɒ/	/tʃə/	/rəʊ/		/'mæ/	/tɪ/
•	ko	muh	di	yuh	•	the	si	nuh	muh	ruh	•	va	luh	tie	•	zday
	/'kɒ/	/mə/	/di/	/jə/		/ðə/	/'sɪ/	/nə/	/mə/	/rə/		/'væ/	/lə/	/taɪ/		/'zdeɪ/

*Just look at the number of schwas! Of the sixteen unstressed syllables, eleven of them (69%) use the weak stress vowel sound schwa: /ə/. Amazing!

Before you throw this book across the room in disgust – what is he teaching us! – try saying the sentence a few times quickly, with stress on the stressed syllables (marked by ●). It's not too far from natural rapid speech in English. I'm not saying that this way of speaking is ideal, or that every native speaker of English speaks like this – or, indeed, that you or your students should speak like this. Granted, in rapid speech we use more consonant sounds between syllables than this, especially within individual words, but this image highlights – in a dramatic way – how connected speech techniques can be used to achieve the goal of easy, rapid speech – and how the most natural way to speak English is with as many (vc) and (cv) connections as possible.

Connected Speech Templates – Instructions

(Note: see also the Connected Sentence Cards on p.3.1, and Focus on Connected Speech starting on p.11.1.)

Connected Speech Templates enable you to teach students:

- a) how to identify and use the stressed vowel sounds in a sentence
- b) how to speak with connections between the words in a sentence

The Connected Speech Templates consist of ten separate stages. Depending on where your students are at with understanding connected speech, you could do some or all of the stages with them, over the course of several lessons, or all in one lesson; or they could complete the templates at home. In the Talk a Lot lesson materials there is one complete example template for one starting sentence from each unit. When students are familiar with the concepts used in the templates, they could begin applying them to other sentence block sentences, or to other sentences that they either find or write themselves, using the template on p.4.6.

Whilst working on this activity, students should speak the words and phrases – as well as the whole sentences – out loud with their partners. Although this work is partly theoretical, students must spend time practising what they are learning by speaking out loud, in order to improve their spoken English.

1. See that the content words have already been separated from the function words

Words in a sentence are either content words or function words. Content words are “dictionary words” that have a meaning on their own outside of the sentence, whilst function words are there to make the grammar work and provide the weak stresses.

2. Identify how many syllables there are in each content word

This should be straightforward to do. If students are unsure, they could use a good dictionary which shows the words broken up into syllables.

3. Do any of the content words have suffixes? Are there any compound nouns?

In stage 4, students will have to find the stressed syllable on each content word. This preceding activity can give clues as to which syllables are stressed. Suffixes are almost never stressed, e.g. shopp -ing, doct -or, etc (word stress is underlined). So, if there is a two-syllable word with a suffix, like “teach -er”, you can be almost 100% sure that the word stress is on the first syllable. (For more on suffixes, see p.15.1.) Compound nouns are nouns with more than one syllable that consist of: a) different nouns together, e.g. “football” = “foot” + “ball”; b) an adjective with a noun, e.g. “whiteboard” = “white” + “board”, or c) a noun with a verb, e.g. “shoplifting” = “shop” + “lifting”. Compound nouns almost always have the strong stress on the first syllable. (For more on compound nouns, see p.16.1.)

4. Mark the stressed syllable on each content word

“How do I know which syllable in a word is stressed?”

Each content word has one strong stress, which is always on a vowel sound. There is usually one vowel sound in every syllable. Content words with only one syllable carry the stress on the whole word. The majority of words in a sentence or text will fall into one of three groups:

- i) one-syllable words – the stress falls on this syllable
- ii) words with suffixes – for two syllable words the stress falls on the first syllable; for longer words, we know that the suffix is almost always unstressed
- iii) compound nouns – the stress almost always falls on the first syllable

This gives us lots of help in finding the stressed syllables in a sentence. See p.13.1 for a more detailed guide to identifying word stress.

More tips:

- a) Look in your dictionary for the phonetic spelling of the word and you will see the strong stress mark like this /' / before the stressed syllable. If your dictionary doesn't have each word spelled in the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA), try to get one that does.
- b) When you learn new words, don't just learn the spelling, but also learn which syllable has the strong stress and how the word sounds. If you don't already know the phonetic alphabet, start learning it today, using the materials in this handbook (see p.18.1). It should be an essential part of learning spoken English, rather than an optional extra.

5. Identify the vowel sound of each stressed syllable

Students should use the phonetic alphabet chart on p.18.6 to help them with this stage. When they have done this they will have the “sound spine” of the whole sentence. These vowel sounds are the most important sounds in the sentence. If students can get these vowel sounds right, with the right rhythm, they will have an excellent chance of being understood, even if they mispronounce a few consonant sounds, or miss out some function words. Let's illustrate this with an example. Take the following dialogue (stressed syllables are underlined):

Mel: What are you doing at the weekend?

Jim: I'm helping a friend move house.

On the printed page it's easy to understand, but let's imagine that the conversation was taking place during breakfast and that Jim answered with a mouthful of toast (stressed syllables are underlined):

Jim: A melpina fre moo vow. /ə'mew.pɪn ə'fre? 'mu: 'vau/ (IPA – stressed vowel sounds are bold)

There are some consonant sounds missing, in particular the beginnings of words (“helping” and “house”) and the ends of words (e.g. “friend” and “house”), all examples of elision. There is a /w/ sound instead of the /l/ in helping, an example of assimilation. There is a glottal stop /ʔ/ to replace the “nd” of “friend”. Words have been linked together (“I’m helping”, “helping a”, and “move house”). It’s not a good example of Standard Pronunciation, but is it enough to communicate? I think yes. Try saying it yourself as if you have a mouthful of toast. (Or even make some toast and then try it for real!) If students can make the correct vowel sounds on the correct stressed syllables in the sentence – and can use the context for guidance about meaning, in this case, the question “What are you doing at the weekend?” – it should be possible for them to be understood. It’s one of the reasons why people in the UK with wildly different accents are able to understand each other. There may be some dropped or muffled consonant sounds, but as long as the right vowel sounds are on the right stressed syllables it’s OK. We can further underline the great importance of vowel sounds when we compare them with consonant sounds. Let’s use the same sentence as our example, but invert the roles, with all the consonant sounds correct, and even the stressed syllables correct, but the wrong vowel sounds:

Mel: What are you doing at the weekend?

Jim: I’m hallping a frond mive horse. /aɪm 'hɔ:l.pɪŋ ə 'frɒnd 'maɪv 'hɔ:s/

(stressed syllables are underlined)

(IPA – stressed vowel sounds are bold)

You’re what? You’re hallping a frond? What? Without the correct vowel sounds communication is severely damaged. So, for good communication, say the correct vowel sound on each correct stressed syllable.

6. Identify weak forms among the function words

Now let’s turn our attention to the function words. Are there any weak forms among them? See p.17.1 for more information and a useful list of weak forms in English. Here is a summary of word types that have weak forms:

Word Type: Examples:

conjunctions: and, but, than, that prepositions: at, to, for, of, from verb “be”: are, am, is auxiliary verbs: has, have, can, do, were, would pronouns: he, you, his, her, him, them, your articles: the, an, a

Because function words are not stressed, we can use their weak forms, e.g. /fə/ instead of /fɔ:/, with the aim of reducing the words that fall between the content words. We can’t omit these words altogether – that would make our sentences grammatically incorrect – but we can reduce them, squash them, and make them shorter, thus further emphasising the content words, and, in particular, the stressed vowel sound in each content word. You might want to look at function words as being the enemy of rapid speech. All too often students of English give words like “and”, “to”, “from”, and “can” a full sound and full stress, which messes up the sentence stress and rhythm of the sentence, by making it much harder to hear the correct stressed vowel sounds on the content words. Truly, these pesky function words – to, of, for, a, etc. – try to get above their station far too often and must be SQUASHED!

So, coming back to the connected speech templates... students should look at each function word and decide whether or not it has a weak form that can be used in the sentence. If it does, students should write “W” over the greyed out “W” on the template.

7. What kind of sounds connect the words in the sentence?

Next, we come to look at the sounds that connect the words together. For this stage students will need to know about vowel sounds and consonant sounds. See p.18.6 for a list of all the sounds in the English language – both vowel and consonant. The connecting sound between two words will be one of these kinds:

- a) consonant sound to consonant sound (cc)
- b) consonant sound to vowel sound (cv)
- c) vowel sound to consonant sound (vc)
- d) vowel sound to vowel sound (vv)

Try saying the words out loud and listen for the sound at the end of the first word and the sound at the beginning of the second word. Let’s take the words “fifty five” for example. The sound at the end of the first word (“fifty”) is a vowel sound: /i/, and the sound at the beginning of the second word (“five”) is a consonant sound: /f/, so students would write “vc” in the box between these two words to denote “vowel sound to consonant sound”. Students should look for the connecting sounds between the words and write one of the four labels (above) in each box.

8. Identify techniques of connected speech for each transition between two words

If we know what kind of sounds connect two words, we can have a go at saying which technique of connected speech will be used. See p.11.3 for more on the techniques of connected speech. In general, we can say that:

- a) if the transition sounds are consonant to consonant (cc), the techniques of connected speech are likely to be assimilation (A), elision (E), or glottal stops (G). This is because the English tongue can’t cope with two consonant sounds rubbing together, so we either get rid of, or change the sound of, one of them.
- b) if the transition sounds are consonant to vowel (cv) or vowel to consonant (vc), the techniques of connected speech are likely to be linking (L), or R-linking (R). This is because the English tongue is able to easily produce a smooth transition between consonant and vowel sounds, and vice versa.
- c) if the transition sounds are vowel to vowel (vv), the technique of connected speech is likely to be intrusion (I). This is because the English tongue can’t cope with two vowels flowing together, so we have to produce a consonant sound – /j/, /w/, or /r/ – to make the two sounds run together. The aim of connected speech is effective communication through words that flow together fluently, with a minimum of jarring sounds.

9. Identify the missing or new sounds between two words

If students find any examples of assimilation, elision, or intrusion – i.e. a sound has changed (A), is missing (E), or has been added (I) – they should write down the missing or changed sound(s). This helps to draw their attention to these particular techniques of connected speech.

10. Write examples using the IPA to show transitions between words

Students should have been saying the sentence out loud, as well as the sound transitions between the words, throughout the whole of this activity. Finally, they should try to write a few examples of some of these sound transitions using the IPA. They could use the example(s) on the answer page for guidance, then use the IPA to write their own examples. Higher level students could write the whole sentence using the IPA, and annotate instances of connected speech techniques.

Discussion Words and Question Sheets – Instructions

It's amazing how much you can do with forty cut-out vocabulary words! We have outlined many activities for using these words with students on the discussion words question sheets. First of all, print a discussion words page onto thin card and cut up the cards with scissors. If possible you could laminate them to make them extra sturdy.

The main activity goes as follows: sit down with the whole class around a large table and lay out all of the cards face down. Students take a number of cards each. The number they take depends on the number of students in the class and for how long the teacher wants the activity to last, e.g. for a ten minute activity ten students could each take two cards.

Go around the group one student at a time. Each student chooses one of their cards and has to describe the word in English without saying it. The other students have to guess the word. The students could use dictionaries to find new words that they don't know. It's possible for students to make this activity deliberately harder for their peers by giving more cryptic descriptions!

Using the Question Sheets

The teacher reads the questions out loud in a random order, or one or more of the students could read out the questions. The teacher should use as many of the questions as is necessary to fill the time that they have allotted to this activity. For example, if you have 25 minutes for this activity it's unlikely that you will need to use the main activity as described above as well as all of the questions on the handout. As with the Talk a Lot course in general, there is more material here than will probably be needed; but as all teachers know, it's better to have too much material planned for a lesson than not enough!

Extension Activities

- The students work on the main activity with the words in pairs or small groups.
- The students have to think of ten, twenty, thirty or forty additional words on the same topic, e.g. Music, and make their own discussion words cards, using the template on p.5.4.
- The teacher or the students invent new questions based on the original/new words, using the template on p.5.5 for guidance.
- Have a game of vocabulary bingo. Each student writes down fifteen words from the forty words in three lines: five on the top, five on the middle and five on the bottom. The teacher reads out words from the group at random. The students cross out the words they have written down when they hear the teacher say them. The students race to see who can cross off the first line, then two lines, then all of the words.
- "Yes/No" questions: one student takes a card with a word on it, keeping it secret from the others, who have to ask "Yes/No" questions in order to find out what the word is. The first student can only answer "Yes" or "No". For example, for words on the topic of "Cars", the other students could ask: "Is it inside a car?", "Can I put my foot on it?", "Does it play music?", etc. until they are able to guess the identity of the word. This is a great activity to get students making questions with inversion.

Discussion Words and Question Sheets – Instructions

- The students match the phonetic and English spellings of different words, translate words into/from the IPA, or group words by the sounds they contain. (See p.18.29 for discussion words from Book 1 and p.18.34 for discussion words from Book 2.)
- A student mimes different words without talking, while the others have to guess them.
- Word association activities:
 - a) the teacher (or a student) chooses a word and each student has to say six words that they associate with this word, or each student in the group has to say one word. For example, if the word is “head” the students could say “nose”, “face”, “eye”, “ear”, “chin”, “mouth”, and so on.
 - b) the teacher (or a student) chooses a word and the first student says the first word that comes into their head, followed by the next student and the next in a kind of word association chain. See how long your group can go for without running out of steam. You may be surprised where you end up! For example: “dog” > “bark” > “tree” > “field” > “farm” > “cow” > “milk”, and so on.
- Improvisation: a student is given a word (or chooses one) and has to talk about it for a set period of time, e.g. twenty seconds. If the student pauses for longer than, say, five seconds, the word passes to the next student, or a new word is given. For higher level groups you could lengthen the period of time, e.g. to one minute. You could give points to each student for the length of time that they manage to talk without a long pause, and add them together to get a winner at the end of the game. For example, if the student talks for fifteen seconds, you would give them fifteen points, and so on.
- Play vocabulary battleships! Students have to work in pairs and they both have a copy of the discussion words page from that lesson’s topic, e.g. “Sport”. They should label the columns at the top A, B, C, and D, and the rows on the left-hand side from top to bottom 1-10, so that the word “volleyball” is in cell B5, for example. Each student marks ten random cells in their grid – these are their “battleships”. Without showing their page, Student A asks for a cell on Student B’s grid, for example, “Can I have D5, please?” If this cell (“cue”) has not been marked as a battleship, Student B says, “Miss!” and play passes to them. Student B now requests a cell on Student A’s grid, e.g. “I would like A6, please”, which is “swimming”. If “swimming” has been marked as a battleship, Student A must speak in English for at least twenty seconds about that word – without pausing! If they can do it, play passes back to them. If they can’t do it, Student A’s battleship is “sunk” (and crossed out on both grids) and Student B can choose another cell on the grid. The object of the game is to sink all of your partner’s battleships by: a) guessing the correct grid reference, and b) speaking for twenty seconds (or longer) about the vocabulary word, without pausing. This is a great game to get students speaking in English, as well as to encourage creativity and lateral thinking.

You could make any of these activities into a competition – individual or team – with points given for correct answers, and prizes. The teacher could even deduct points for incorrect answers. Prizes could be awarded for the first student to answer a question correctly, or the student who wins the vocabulary bingo, or who can think of the most new words on the same topic without a dictionary. For a fun group competition there could be a league, with the same teams competing in each lesson for points that accumulate towards a running total. It depends on how competitive your students are!

Assessment

Assessment is performed by the teacher checking and correcting during the task, listening for errors that can be dissected later on in a group feedback session, giving individual as well as group feedback, and referring students back to:

- a) the grammar they are learning from forming the sentence blocks, and building sentences
- b) the pronunciation work they are doing using the techniques of connected speech and the IPA

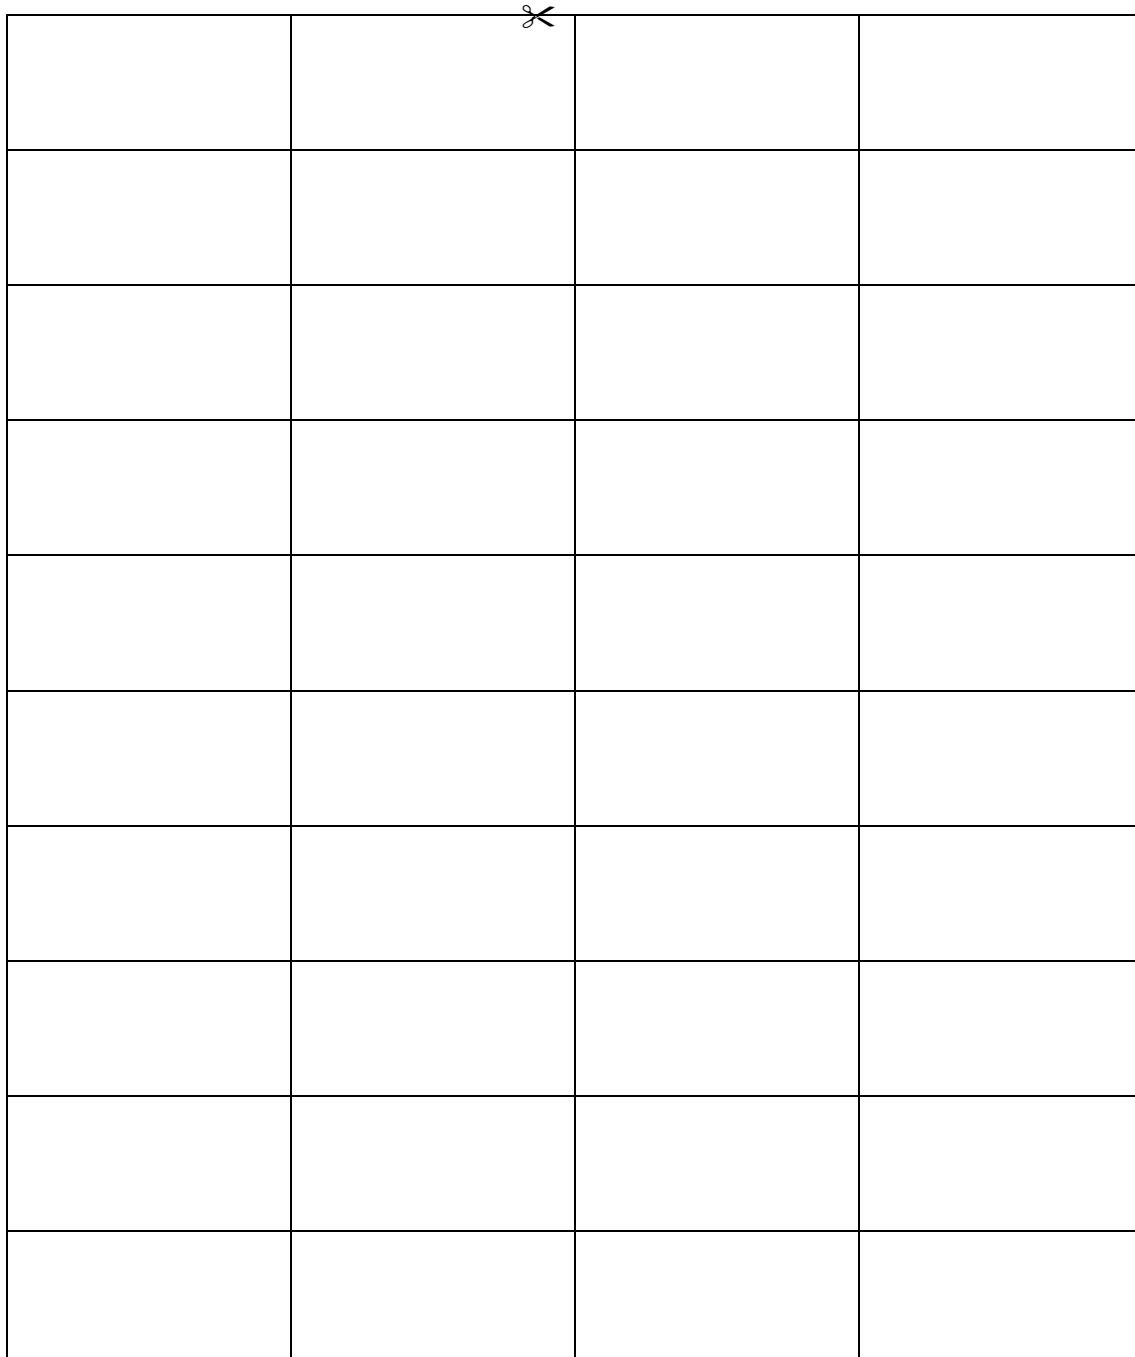

Each student's achievement in this activity is also recorded as part of their overall lesson score (for both accuracy and effort) by the teacher on their course report.

How to Use

Discussion Words – Sample Lesson Plan

Activity Type:	Discovery; embedding new vocabulary
Level:	Elementary - Pre-Intermediate
Skills:	Vocabulary; Speaking & Listening; Pronunciation; Stress
Class Size:	Students work in pairs or small groups with a maximum of six in a group. This lesson also works well with individual students in a one to one situation
Time:	1 hour
Aim:	To learn and embed/memorise new vocabulary words and phrases – spellings, meanings, stress, and sounds – on a given topic, through exploration and discovery
Materials:	1 set of cut-up vocabulary words and phrases per six students; whiteboard and pens; students have their notebooks and pens

Procedure:

1. Students should be in small groups – six per set of discussion words. Give out the sets. Students put all of the cards face up on the table. Ask them to read the words out loud and put any words and phrases that they don't know – new words – into a separate group.
2. Students write down the new words and phrases in their notebooks. Students either look up the new words and phrases, or ask other groups; or the teacher explains their meanings. Students quickly write down translations and/or draw pictures to help them remember the meanings.
3. Students put the cards into alphabetical order. This could be a team activity with a prize or mark for the fastest and most accurate team. Note: some higher level students balk at doing what they consider to be an Elementary task – putting words into alphabetical order. But the aim (as with the whole of this lesson) is to keep the students looking at and focusing on the words. As they do this they will notice the words that are new for them and “lock in” the meanings. That said, I've never had a pre-intermediate level group get this task completely right first time – there is always a last minute revision of the order! The teacher checks and corrects each group's list. At this point, ask the students to read out the list and correct pronunciation as they go. If one group finishes before the other(s) they could go straight on to the next activity. In this way, different groups can move at their own pace through the lesson. If you have only one group, the pace will be set by the level of the students.
4. Put the words and phrases into groups according to how many syllables they have. Students love trying this and often haven't considered syllables before. You will hear them sounding out the words on their own initiative, without prompting. The teacher checks and corrects.
5. Students decide where the strong stress falls in each word or phrase and put a mark on the card above the correct syllable. Students can refer to dictionaries as a last resort to check the phonetic spelling and word stress. They should treat a phrase, e.g. “petrol station” as one entity and mark the stress for the phrase, rather than each individual word. Then students group the cards according to stress within their original groups. For example, in a group of words with three syllables, there could be two words with the strong stress on the first syllable, two words with the strong stress on the second syllable, and one word with the strong stress on the third syllable.

6. Even if your groups are moving at roughly the same pace, you should stop and have whole class feedback here. Students choose five or six words each and have to say the words with the stress in the right place. The teacher highlights errors on the board.

If you wanted to look at word stress with your students in more depth, you could insert the optional stress discovery stage here (see below).

7. Depending on how you're doing for time, you could try one of the more in-depth questions from the Lesson Questions section of the discussion words question sheet for the topic that you're studying, e.g. question 6. in the Life Events topic from Book 2: “Put [the life events] into order of when they could happen during a person's life.”

8. Students put words into groups according to phonetic sounds. You could write on the board five different vowel sounds or diphthongs and five different consonant sounds and ask them to categorise the words according to their sounds, or assign different sounds to each group. The teacher checks and corrects, then leads class feedback (or separate group feedback if the groups are progressing at wildly different speeds). Encourage students to use the phonetic spellings in their dictionaries to help them, and the phonetic alphabet chart on p.18.6.

9. Students take five cards each. Each person has to describe one of their words or phrases for the others (or other teams) to guess, without saying the word(s) on the card. After a few rounds of describing, you could ask the students to mime the word or phrase instead. All the time the students are focused on the forty key vocabulary words and phrases. The teacher checks and corrects.

10. The teacher uses the Lesson Questions for the topic as the basis of a quiz.

11. Depending on time and level, students could write their own quiz questions based on the vocabulary words, and fire them at the other team(s).

12. Finally, at the end of the lesson, the students close their books and turn over all the cards (or collect them in). Challenge them to remember all forty words. You could also do this the following day or lesson as a memory test.

Note: You could drop one or more of these activities depending on time and what you want to practise with your students

Homework Activities: a) Students prepare for a spelling test with the forty words and phrases in the next lesson

How to Use

Discussion Words – Sample Lesson Plan

- b) Students write a story or article that includes all of the forty words and phrases
- c) Students write twenty (or more!) new words and phrases on the same topic.

Optional Stress Discovery Stage

(To be inserted after stage 6 above.)

1. Students have finished checking word stress and have the correct stressed syllable marked on each word or phrase on their cards.
2. Put all of the cards on the table in the following groups:

Phrases:	1 Syllable. Words:	Stress on 1 st Syllable:	Stress on 2 nd Syllable:	Stress on 3 rd Syllable:	etc.

3. Take away phrases – we are looking for individual word stress only.
4. Take away one syllable words – we know where the stress is (on the only vowel sound in the word)
5. Identify suffixes in the rest of the words. Notice how none of them are stressed*.
6. Identify compound nouns. Notice how they are all stressed on the first syllable*.
7. Notice how most of the words are stressed on the first syllable. This is very common in English.
8. Look at the other words. Where is the strong stress? Why is it like that? (See p.13.4 for more analysis of why some nouns are not stressed on the first syllable, e.g. words that come from a verb, foreign words, and words that have a suffix with its own particular stress pattern.)

(*It's wrong to make general rules about topics in English, because students have a habit of finding exceptions to rules that can make a teacher blush! However, we can say with confidence that suffixes are almost always unstressed (you can see some that are usually stressed on p.15.4), and that compound nouns are almost always stressed on the first syllable. You can see some exceptions to this rule on p.13.2.)

Big Word Game

Instructions

The Big Word Game is based on either the list of 50 questions (see page 5.15), or the set of 50 cards with the same questions printed on them (see pp.5.23-5.28), to be used in conjunction with a set of discussion word cards from any Talk a Lot topic – or any word list that you want to study. The question cards could be laminated for durability, if possible.

There are a few different ways for you to use the questions. Here we outline some of the methods that we like, for both competitive and non-competitive activities. No doubt you and your students will be able to think of further variations and more ways to utilise the questions!

The first time you use this activity with your class, you may need to concept check some of the more difficult questions to make sure that your class understands them, e.g. “How many consonant clusters does this word contain?” This is an impossible question for a student to answer, unless they have learned what a “consonant cluster” is! See the notes for teachers on pp.5.17-5.19 to check what students need to know to be able to answer each question.

The following activities are ideal for use during the word focus sessions on a Talk a Lot lesson plan; as warmers at the beginning of a lesson, or as the basis of some competitive fun at the end of a busy lesson. It’s up to you what you want to do with them!

With grateful thanks to M. for her invaluable help and encouragement in trialling this activity, and for providing some of the questions. Dziękuję! ;o)

Competitive Game #1: Question Cards – Pairs

SET UP:

Students work in pairs. A set of 40 discussion words (or your chosen vocabulary words) is spread out on the table in front of them, so that they can both see all of the words. There is also a pack of shuffled question cards face down on the table. You should use only the first 40 question cards (in black type) for competitive games, and all 50 cards (including the last ten in blue type) for non-competitive activities. Each player has 20 tokens – or coins – which they will use to “buy” questions during the game. (For a shorter game, they could have fewer tokens each, and for a longer game, more.)

HOW TO PLAY:

Player A chooses a discussion word, but does not touch it or say what it is. Player B then “buys” a question card by giving one token to their opponent.¹ To buy a question card costs one token. Player B picks up the top card from the pack and reads out the question. Player A has to answer truthfully about the word that they have chosen. Player B then tries to guess the word. To have a guess costs one token. If Player B can’t guess the word, they can buy another question for one token. This continues until they guess the word, or “give up” and Player A reveals the word. To “give up” costs two tokens. After this, the roles are reversed and Player B chooses a word, whilst Player A has to buy questions and guesses.

¹ Or, if you are using the question list, Player A chooses a number between 1-40, which Player B reads out (i.e. Player B cannot choose their own – perhaps easier! – question), and then tries to guess Player A’s word. Player B still has to “buy” the question from their partner.

Big Word Game

WINNING:

The game ends when one player has used up all of their tokens. The winner is the player who still has tokens. Therefore the winner is the person who buys the least questions and guesses. Variation: you could agree a set time for the game – e.g. 15 minutes – and when the time has finished, the winner is the player with the most tokens left.

BENEFITS:

Both students are working with the vocabulary words and thinking about a wide range of topics and techniques connected with word focus.

EXAMPLE:

Here is an example of how a game might start, using the discussion words from the “Transport” unit in Elementary Book 1:

Player A: OK. I've chosen a word.
Player B: Don't tell me!
Player A: I won't. Don't worry!

Player B buys a question card by giving one token to Player A.

Player B: (Reading) “Is it a phrase or a word?”
Player A: It's a phrase.

*This information eliminates all but six of the discussion words from the “Transport” unit.
Player B buys a guess by giving one token to Player A.*

Player B: Is it “service station”?
Player A: No.

Player B buys a question card by giving one token to Player A.

Player B: (Reading) “Describe this word using exactly four words.”
Player A: OK. Leave your vehicle here.
Player B: Car park!
Player A: Yes. That's right.
Player B: OK. Now I'll choose a word.

*Player B has chosen a word.
Player A buys a question card by giving one token to Player B.*

[etc.]

Competitive Game #2: Question List – Whole Class

SET UP:

This game is played by the whole class, or a large group of people, and uses the question list (see page 5.15) rather than the question cards.

HOW TO PLAY:

A volunteer is chosen from the group, who chooses one of the 40 discussion words (without revealing it) as well as a number from 1-40. The teacher reads out the question from the question list. The volunteer answers the question and the whole group have to look at the 40 words and find the answer. This continues, with each volunteer choosing three or four words, before the next student is picked. This could be used as a fun warmer at the beginning of a lesson, or as a short “time-filler”, or a wind-down, at the end of a lesson. It could be made more competitive by dividing the class into teams and giving points to each team when they correctly identify the word – not to mention offering prizes for the winning team, and forfeits for the losers, e.g. wipe the board!

WINNING:

The first team to 10 / 20 / 30 etc. wins. Or, within a time limit, the team with the most points at the end wins.

BENEFITS:

It's a fun and noisy group activity which everybody can play. Students will explore a variety of word focus themes from the Talk a Lot course, as well as continue to focus on the discussion words from the lesson or topic that they happen to be studying at that time.

Competitive Game #3: Question Cards – Quick Game

SET UP:

This is a simpler competitive game for two players, using the 40 question cards in black type (not the blue ones). All of the discussion word cards are lying face down spread across the table, in no particular order; and all of the question cards have been shuffled and are face down in a pack on the table. This game is random! Each player has 20 tokens – or coins. (For a shorter game, they could have fewer tokens each, and for a longer game, more.)

HOW TO PLAY:

Student A picks up any discussion word card and reads out the word or phrase, so that both students know the vocabulary word. Next they pick up a question card and have to perform the task given. If they can't, they have to give one token to Student B, who can also try to answer the question. If Student B can do it, Student A has to give them another token. Then they swap over, so that Student B picks up a discussion word card, reads it out loud, then picks up a question card and has to perform the task given – and so on.

Big Word Game

Instructions

WINNING:

The game ends when one player has used up all of their tokens; the player who still has tokens left wins. Therefore the winner is the person who answers the most questions correctly. Variation: you could agree a time-limit for the game and, when the time is up, the player with the most tokens left is the winner. Note: the teacher may need to adjudicate / help when neither student is sure that the correct answer has been given!

BENEFITS:

A quick and fun activity for students working in pairs, focusing on the language of the topic and some of the general spoken English themes of the Talk a Lot course.

Competitive Game #4 – Board Game

SET UP:

This is a sit-down board game for 2-6 players, which uses the game board on page 5.29. You could print it (or photocopy it) so that it's bigger – e.g. A3 size instead of A4 – and therefore easier to use. You could also laminate it for durability, or even design your own game board along similar lines! You can use any group of vocabulary words, such as a set of discussion words from any of the Talk a Lot topics, e.g. "Animals" from Elementary Book 2. All players should be able to see all of the words at all times. You will need one counter for each player (e.g. a coin), and a dice or spinner with 1-6 on it. You will also need one set of question cards (questions 1-40 only), which should be shuffled and placed face downwards on the table.

HOW TO PLAY:

All players place their counters on the START square (#1). Each player throws the dice once. The player with the highest score goes first. This player throws the dice and moves their counter forward the same number of spaces as shown on the dice. If the space they land on is blank, the next player throws the dice, and so on. However, there are several "action" spaces, where the player has to do something. These are both positive and negative:

POSITIVE ACTION SPACES:

e.g. +2 = move forward x spaces, in this example two spaces

e.g. →12 = move forward to this number space on the board, in this example #12

Also, look out for two arrows which will take you forward several spaces!

NEGATIVE ACTION SPACES:

e.g. -2 = move back x spaces, in this example two spaces

e.g. ←17 = move back to this number space on the board, in this example #17

X = miss a turn – i.e. when it's their next turn to roll the dice, they don't play!

Also, look out for two arrows which will take you back several spaces!

QUESTION SPACES:

- ? If a player lands on a question space they have to choose a word from the vocabulary words, and write it down, but keeping it secret from the other players. Another player takes a question card and asks the first player the question. The first player has to answer the question and the other players have to guess the word. If they can guess the word, the first player can move forward four spaces. Therefore, it's very much in the first player's interests to give as good an answer as possible. If they can't answer the question, or the other players can't guess the word, the first player must move back two spaces. It's in the interests of all the players to guess the words, because they all have to rely on each other to do this throughout the game. Therefore if one player doesn't guess your word, or deliberately jokes around and says the wrong word, you will be less disposed to guess their word correctly when they land on a question space!

WINNING:

The winner is the player who reaches the finish space – #100 – first.

BENEFITS:

The aim is to learn about and talk about the chosen vocabulary words and to practise different ways of thinking about them within a fun, competitive, and structured team activity.

Competitive Game #5 – Talk a Lot Bingo!

SET UP:

See p.5.30 for full instructions.

Non-Competitive Activity #1: Analyse a Set of Words

SET UP:

Students could work in pairs, in small groups, one to one with the teacher, or as a whole class with the teacher. This activity uses all 50 questions, and could be done using either the question list or the question cards.

METHOD:

Students simply analyse a specific group of words. The words could be part of a vocabulary set, a complete set of 40 discussion words, or words that the students (or the teacher) have chosen to look at, e.g. a set of eight specific discussion words. Perhaps they could be words that the group has had the most problems with in terms of pronunciation or spelling during the unit. Students select a word from the word set and a question from the question cards (or question list) – either at random or from a group of questions that they (or the teacher) have specifically chosen to study. For example, if you wanted to focus on spelling you could use only the question cards from the question category of “spelling”. (See the question list “categories” version on page 5.16.) The teacher may set a time limit for this activity, and the focus should be on speaking out loud, via discussion of the words and the questions, although students may wish to write a few notes.

Non-Competitive Activity #2: Analyse a Single Word

SET UP:

This is a great way to introduce the tasks on the question cards, and to fix any problems that students may have in understanding how to approach them. Students could work in pairs, in small groups, one to one with the teacher, or as a whole class with the teacher. This activity uses all 50 questions, and could be carried out using either the question list or the question cards.

METHOD:

This time, students analyse any word from the set of 40 discussion words (or any noun that they or the teacher has chosen). For example, from the “Films” unit in Talk a Lot Elementary Book 3, they might choose (or randomly select) the word “blockbuster”. Students go through as many questions as they want – or as time allows – and answer each one using the same word: “blockbuster”. There is an example of this activity on pp.5.20-5.22. Again, the teacher may set a time limit for this activity, or even set it for homework. The focus should be on speaking out loud during this activity, via discussion of the words and the questions, although, of course, students may want to write down some of their findings.

43.	WORD Students need to know:	Translate this word into your language. Is there any similarity or link? ...how to translate the word into their own language, and how to look for links in spelling and/or origin. For example, the English word "hospital" has a similar form in Polish: "szpital".
44.	PRONUNCIATION Students need to know:	Say this word broken up into its different syllables. ...how to identify syllables in a word.
45.	QUESTION FORMS Students need to know:	Write a yes/no question that includes this word. ...how to make yes/no questions, e.g. "Is...?" or "Has...?" etc.
46.	SPELLING Students need to know:	Write this word using the IPA. ...how to write a word using the IPA (International Phonetic Alphabet) spelling rather than the regular dictionary spelling.
47.	PRONUNCIATION Students need to know:	Say this word very quickly. ...how to pronounce each syllable of the word quickly, whilst maintaining the stress of the word.
48.	SPELLING Students need to know:	Tell me the plural form of this word. ...that with many nouns in English we put an "s" at the end of the word to make the plural form, whereas other groups of nouns have different irregular plural forms, e.g. one glass, two glasses; one child, two children, etc.
49.	SPELLING Students need to know:	Say the letters of this word out loud backwards. ...how to say the letters of the alphabet.
50.	PRONUNCIATION Students need to know:	Say this word very slowly. ...how to pronounce each syllable of the word slowly, whilst maintaining the stress of the word.

Below are some sample answers based on the word “employment” from the “Life Events” unit in Elementary Book 2:

20.	DRAWING	Draw this word with your eyes closed. [This word is hard to draw because it’s an abstract noun, rather than something that you can see and touch. You could draw a contract, for example (as we have done below), or a CV, or a queue outside a job centre, etc. Try to think laterally!]
21.	SOUNDS	Tell me the third sound in this word. /p/
22.	ASSOCIATION	Tell me an object that you associate with this word. A wage packet, or a CV.
23.	SOUNDS	What is the vowel sound on the stressed syllable in this word? /ɔɪ/ Here is the full phonetic spelling: /ɪm'plɔɪ.mənt/
24.	WORD	Does this word contain a suffix? If yes, what is it? Yes. The suffix is “ment”.
25.	SOUNDS	What kind of sound does this word begin with and end with – vowel or consonant? It begins with a vowel sound – /e/ – and ends with a consonant sound – /t/
26.	SPELLING	What is the second letter of this word? The second letter is “m”.
27.	MEANING	Is this word a person, place, or thing? It’s a thing.
28.	SYLLABLES	Which syllable is stressed in this word? The second syllable is stressed.
29.	SPELLING	How many vowel clusters does this word contain? None. [I.e. there aren’t two vowels together in the spelling of this word.]
30.	SOUNDS	Does this word contain a weak stress schwa sound? /ə/ Yes: /ɪm'plɔɪ.m ə nt/
31.	DRAWING	Your partner has to draw this word from your instructions. [Your instructions could be:] “Draw a long line of people waiting outside an office [i.e. a job centre]. They look bored. Draw some pound notes or dollar bills coming from the office... etc.
32.	SPELLING	How many consonant clusters does this word contain? Three. [The consonant clusters are: emplme, but in a competitive game, don’t say what they are!]
33.	WORD	Is it a phrase or a word? It’s a word.
34.	ASSOCIATION	What’s the first thing you think of when you hear or see this word? Jobs.
35.	DRAWING	Draw a picture of this word without lifting your pen from the paper. [See the answer to #20 above.]
36.	SPELLING	Does the spelling of this word contain any double letters? No. [I.e. there aren’t two of the same letters together in the spelling of this word.]
37.	WORD	Is this word a countable or uncountable noun? Uncountable. [E.g. “I’m looking for employment”, rather than “I’m looking for an employment, or two employments...” etc.]

Below are some sample answers based on the word “employment” from the “Life Events” unit in Elementary Book 2:

38.	SPELLING	Are there any smaller words hidden within this word? Yes. [E.g. “ploy”, “me”, “men”, but in a competitive game, don’t say what they are!]
39.	SPELLING	How many consonants are there in the spelling of this word? Seven. [I.e. “m”, “p”, “l”, “y”, “m”, “n”, “t”, but in a competitive game, don’t say what they are!]
40.	WORD	Is this noun concrete or abstract? It’s an abstract noun.
41.	PRONUNCIATION	Say the letters of this word out loud. You should say: “E-M-P-L-O-Y-M-E-N-T”.
42.	QUESTION FORMS	Write a wh- question that includes this word. For example: “What kind of employment are you looking for?”
43.	WORD	Translate this word into your language. Is there any similarity or link? [Answers will vary. Look for a link – if there is one. For example, in French “employment” translates as “l’emploi”.]
44.	PRONUNCIATION	Say this word broken up into its different syllables. “EM-PLOY-MENT”
45.	QUESTION FORMS	Write a yes/no question that includes this word. For example, “Did you accept the offer of employment?” Answer: “Yes, I did”, or “No, I didn’t”.
46.	SPELLING	Write this word using the IPA. /ɪmˈplɔɪ.mənt/
47.	PRONUNCIATION	Say this word very quickly. [Answers will vary. The idea is to say the word as quickly as possible, but so that it can still be understood. Try to retain the correct stress and sounds.]
48.	SPELLING	Tell me the plural form of this word. There is no plural form. [Because this word is an uncountable noun.]
49.	SPELLING	Say the letters of this word out loud backwards. You should say: “T-N-E-M-Y-O-L-P-M-E”.
50.	PRONUNCIATION	Say this word very slowly. [Answers will vary. The idea is to say the word as slowly as possible, so that you can hear the individual sounds (phonemes) in the word. Try to retain the stress on the correct stressed syllable.]

Talk a Lot Bingo! – Instructions

Competitive Game #5 – Talk a Lot Bingo!

SET UP:

Talk a Lot Bingo! is a fun bingo-style game, that uses similar topics to the ones used in the Big Word Game. This game is best played with a group of students, with the teacher, or one of the students, reading out the questions. Each student has their own bingo card (copied from pp.5.32-5.33) on which they have to write fifteen words from any vocabulary set, for example fifteen words (and phrases) from a group of forty discussion words (from any Talk a Lot unit). Each student should write their fifteen words in private, so that none of the students have got the same fifteen words on their cards.

METHOD:

The teacher, or a volunteer from the group of students, reads out each statement (on p.5.31) – either in order or randomly – and students have to look at the words on their card and cross out each one that the statement applies to. For example, if the statement was: “This word begins with a vowel sound”, students would cross out all of the words on their cards that begin with a vowel sound. If the statement was: “This word is an abstract noun”, students would cross out all of the words on their cards that were not abstract nouns – and so on. Note: it may be necessary to give students a bit of time in between reading the statements, so that they have time to check all the remaining words on their cards. Variation: to make a longer game you could increase the number of words, and to make a shorter game you could simply reduce the number of words.

WINNING:

The first player to cross out all of the words on their card is the winner. The winning card could be checked by the teacher, or an independent adjudicator – depending on how competitive things tend to get in your classroom! If desired, the teacher could keep note of which questions they asked in that round, so that they could spend time discussing the language points raised by the vocabulary words on the winning card with the whole group, and perhaps do some board work.

BENEFITS:

A great warmer or wind-down for the whole class to join in with, generating plenty of practice that is really worthwhile in terms of improving spoken English. Plus the competitive edge makes it fun – something that students will really enjoy playing.

Information Exchanges – Instructions

Information exchanges are a terrific way to get students talking because they can only be completed by students asking each other questions. The objective of each information exchange is for students to find out and write down the information that is missing from their handout, but which their partner has. This objective is complemented by a super-objective – or additional purpose – which is topic-specific. For example, in the “Crime” information exchange in Book 2, students have to find out information about possible suspects in a murder investigation, by exchanging information with their partners – so that they can make a deduction as to who dunnit! In “The Human Body” information exchange – also in Book 2 – students have to find out details about the physical appearance of four different people, so that they can decide who they would most like to swap bodies with for a day... and so on!

Students should work with a partner and not look at their partner’s handout. If they need to know a spelling or look up a word in their dictionary their partner could write the spelling on a separate piece of paper, or better still say it out loud. Do discourage students from simply reading and copying from their partner’s handout – this is Talk a Lot, not Write a Lot!

This activity is also great for practising and consolidating question forms and answers. The teacher should monitor the students as they work and encourage correct question forms, or spend time looking at the question forms for each information exchange on the board, for example:

Topic (from Book 2): “Cars – Buying a Used Car” – sample questions and answers

Student A: “What make is Used Car 1?”	Student B: “It’s a Citroën.”
Student B: “What model is Used Car 1?”	Student A: “It’s a C4 Picasso.”
Student A: “What colour is Used Car 2?”	Student B: “It’s brown and grey.”
Student B: “How many miles has Used Car 2 done?”	Student A: “It’s done 126,001 miles.”
Student A: “What kind of fuel does Used Car 2 use?”	Student B: “Petrol.”
Student B: “How many doors has Used Car 3 got?”	Student A: “It’s got five doors.”
Student A: “Has Used Car 4 got a CD player?”	Student B: “Yes, it has.”

For Book 2 there is a complete list of sample questions and answers for each topic’s information exchange activity in the answer section at the back of the book, along with a completed grid for each activity. For the topics in Book 3 the answers and additional information is included with each handout.

Note: teachers and/or students can make their own information gap activities by using the blank template on p.6.3.

Assessment

Assessment is performed by the teacher checking and correcting during the task, listening for errors that can be dissected later on in a group feedback session, giving individual as well as group feedback, and referring students back to:

- a) the grammar they are learning from forming the sentence blocks, and building sentences
- b) the pronunciation work they are doing using the techniques of connected speech and the IPA

Each student's achievement in this activity is also recorded as part of their overall lesson score (for both accuracy and effort) by the teacher on their course report.

How to Use

Multi-Purpose Texts – Instructions

The Multi-Purpose Texts are the closest thing you will find to a traditional EFL coursebook-type of activity in the Talk a Lot materials. These handouts are deliberately designed to be multi-purpose (hence the name!) and can therefore be used in lots of different ways, according to the needs of your students and your teaching situation. For Talk a Lot lessons it would be great to use the handouts to improve students' speaking and listening skills, but the handouts can also have value as tools for consolidating material learned during lessons, and for practising students' reading and writing skills (e.g. as homework activities).

Some suggestions for using the handouts:

1. Practise Speaking and Listening Skills

- A reading race between pairs of SS, using the whole text, or part of it. See p.7.2 for a reading race lesson plan.
- Students listen as the teacher reads a version of the text with twenty differences. Students have to spot the differences.
- Gap-fill Version –the teacher reads the text, whilst the students listen and write the missing word (or suggest any word that makes sense).
- Comprehension Questions – students listen and make notes as the teacher reads the text. They shouldn't write every word, but only the important information, e.g. names, places, dates, etc. Students then compare their notes with a partner or the whole group. The teacher reads the text again and students check their notes and refine them, before comparing them again with their partner or group at the end. Next, the teacher either asks the questions verbally, or gives students the handout with the questions. The teacher checks feedback with the whole group at the end of the activity. With lower level groups it may be necessary to do the reading and note-taking stage a third time. Note: you don't have to use all thirty questions – it depends how much time you want to spend on the activity! Adaptations: i) students (or the teacher) could write their own comprehension questions based on the text and use them for this activity. ii) The teacher could use the comprehension questions to do a traditional quiz – like a TV game show – with two or more teams, each having a buzzer (or bell, or gong, etc.), and buzzing in if they know the answer – without referring to the original text.
- True, False, or Unknown? – for this activity the students should be already familiar with the text. All the students stand in the middle of the room (preferably an empty room, or with all the tables and chairs pushed to the sides, so that students can run about). Everybody agrees that one corner of the room means "True", one corner means "False", and a third corner means "Unknown". The teacher shouts out each statement from the handout. The students have to show their answers by running to the correct corner – either True, False, or Unknown. The teacher gives the answer, and any students who get it wrong have to sit out at the side of the room, while the rest continue until either one player is left – the winner! – or the questions have all been used up. Adaptation: students (or the teacher) could write their own True, False, or Unknown? statements based on the text before doing this activity.

- Students imagine the scene and act it out (role play) – including what happens before and after, and any scenes that are talked about in the text.
- Students take turns to read the text out loud; the teacher checks pronunciation.
- Students learn the text by heart, with the teacher reading the beginning of each sentence to prompt the students.
- The teacher dictates part or all of the text, whilst the students write it down. The students check what they have written in pairs, then with the text, or they listen again.
- Discussion: talk about the scene. Have the students ever experienced anything like this? What do they think of the characters' actions, feelings, responses, etc.?

2. Practise Reading and Writing Skills

- Students translate the text into their first language(s).
- Gap-fill Version – students read and write the missing word (from a few different options or any word that makes sense).
- Multiple Choice – Use of English – this is a classic homework activity, but could also be done orally in class.
- Comprehension Questions – students write the answers in full sentences for homework.
- True, False, or Unknown? – students write the answers (T, F, or U) and justify them with reasons from the original text.
- Students underline different parts of a sentence in the original text, e.g. verbs, nouns, adjectives, etc.
- Students identify verb forms, etc.
- Students write the story in their own words (in English).
- Creative writing: students write “What happens next...”
- One student reads the text to their partner, who writes it down word for word.

How to Use

Reading Race – Lesson Plan

Activity Type:	Noisy, busy, active, yet focused
Level:	Elementary - Pre-Intermediate, depending on the level and length of the text that you use
Skills:	Reading, Writing, Speaking, and Listening
Class Size:	Whole group lesson, e.g. ten students in a group
Time:	50 minutes
Aim:	To practise all of the skills – reading, writing, speaking, and listening; to energise a lethargic class; to encourage pair work
Materials:	Board and pen; several copies of the text (including one for you)

Procedure:

1. Find a short text that's suitable for the level of your group. I used the printable version of a fun story from BBC News, which I found online.
2. Introduce the topic and pre-teach new vocab; try to elicit each new word. For example, in this story I had to pre-teach "London Marathon", "autographs" and "exertions", as well as a few more.
3. Put two (or more) copies of the text on the wall in different locations in the classroom. Explain the task to the class. Students have to work in pairs and their aim is to make an accurate copy of the text. One student goes to it, reads part of it, remembers it, then comes back to tell their partner what they have read, while their partner has to write it down. So, one partner is reading and speaking, and the other is listening and writing. Students should swap roles from time to time during the activity. You could set a time limit, or let the activity flow naturally. The important rules are:
 - a) students must not touch or move the text
 - b) students must not shout at each other across the class
 - c) the person who reads the text cannot write the story, and vice versa
4. When a pair has written the complete story they should read through their copy and check it for grammatical and spelling mistakes. If necessary, one person can go back and check the text on the wall and tell their partner how to make corrections.
5. Next, each pair has to write ten comprehension questions about the text for a different pair to answer. The question types should be:
 - a) x4 wh- questions (e.g. what, who, where, when, etc.)
 - b) x4 yes/no questions (e.g. "Is...?", or "Does...?" etc)

Reading Race – Lesson Plan

c) x2 true/false questions

6. Each pair swaps their questions with another pair and the students write answers to the questions. The teacher leads group feedback at the end.
7. The students swap their version of the story with another team and the teacher reads the story as it was printed on the handout. The students have to check the text in front of them for mistakes. They give one point for each deviation from the original text, e.g. a missing word or the wrong kind of article. The pair with the lowest number of points at the end is the winning team!
8. Let the students see the original text so that they can compare it with their work.
9. Optional extension activity: the students have to write down a summary of the lesson: what they did, what they learned, and how they felt about it.

Discussion Questions – Instructions

Students work in pairs, with student A asking student B the first question, then student B asking student A the same question, before moving on to the next question. After between 5-10 minutes the students change partners and repeat the process with a different student. Where there are empty boxes on the handout – for example questions 2, 4 and 7 on the “Cars” Discussion Questions handout from Book 2 – the student should write down their partner’s answers. This is partly to encourage the students to focus on the task in hand, and partly so that the teacher, who should be monitoring all the pairs, can see written evidence that the questions have been asked and answered. Depending on the level of the group, before the students move off to work in pairs the teacher should look at the handout with the whole group and ensure that everybody understands the task and vocabulary used in the questions before they begin. For example, the teacher could pre-teach some of the more difficult words and there could be a dictionary race to see which student finds each word the fastest.

Extension activity: pairs that have finished the activity early could think up their own new discussion questions based on the same topic, or the teacher could prepare additional questions for the students, using the blank template on p.8.2.

At the end of the activity the whole group comes back together for group feedback, where the teacher chooses different students to read a question and tell the class both their own answer and their partner’s answer. The teacher should highlight errors that have occurred and elicit the answers from the group. Interesting structures could be explored in more detail on the board, if there is time.

Assessment

Assessment is performed by the teacher checking and correcting during the task, listening for errors that can be dissected later on in a group feedback session, giving individual as well as group feedback, and referring students back to:

- a) the grammar they are learning from forming the sentence blocks, and building sentences
- b) the pronunciation work they are doing using the techniques of connected speech and the IPA

Each student’s achievement in this activity is also recorded as part of their overall lesson score (for both accuracy and effort) by the teacher on their course report.

Agree or Disagree? – Instructions

This is a free practice pair-work activity, which is similar to the Discussion Questions activity in that the aim is to give students time to practise their English speaking and listening skills without having to conform to rigid structures (e.g. making the sentence blocks). Students have to read each statement aloud and ask their partner whether they agree or disagree with it, and why. The “why” part is really important because it is here that students will have to produce spoken English to justify their opinions. At the same time, students have to give their own opinion – agree or disagree – and state the reasons why they believe this. Students have to put a tick on the handout for “agree” and a cross for “disagree”. The statements are designed to be deliberately provocative, broad sweeping statements, for example this from the “Money” topic in Book 3:

You're nothing unless you've got cash.

Most students will have an opinion on this kind of statement – either agree or disagree. The aim is, of course, the same as that of all Talk a Lot activities – to get students talking. Some students will need more coaxing than others to produce a coherent reason why they feel as they do, whilst others will gush forth their views. The teacher should help the weaker students to participate and the stronger students not to dominate.

It may be a good idea for the teacher to pre-teach some of the more difficult words on the handout at the beginning of the activity, for example the following words from the “Money” Agree or Disagree? handout:

nouns:	verbs:
cash	earn success	share
charity	spend
waste	save stress	lend
salary	steal

You could, of course, explore the sounds and word stress of the words, as well as the spellings. The vocabulary will be on the same topic as the rest of the activities in the lesson, which means that this activity will expand and reinforce what the students are learning about the topic.

Depending on the level of your group, there may be more statements on the handout than you need for the time that you have allotted for the activity, so you could choose a selection of statements for the activity, whether it be five, ten, twelve, whatever.

Extension Activities

- You could hold a class survey on each statement and compile a list of the whole group's answers.
- Students could survey other people – e.g. their family, friends, or other classes within the school.
- The teacher could devise their own Agree or Disagree? statements which are more relevant to their group and teaching situation, using the blank template on p.9.3.

Agree or Disagree? – Instructions

- The students could write their own Agree or Disagree? statements in pairs, using the same blank template, and then swap handouts with another pair.
- You could use an individual statement from the handout as the starting point for a class debate between two competing groups – those who agree and those who disagree. (See p.9.4 for more on how to hold a class debate.)
- Students could do some written work for homework, based on the activity, for example, writing why they agree or disagree with some (or all, if they are really keen!) of the statements.

Assessment is performed by the teacher checking and correcting during the task, listening for errors that can be dissected later on in a group feedback session, giving individual as well as group feedback, and referring students back to:

Disclaimer: we at English Banana.com neither endorse nor support the death penalty in any country for any crime. We have used this question as an example to show how it is possible to build an argument when preparing a short presentation. It's a lively subject for a classroom debate because you can almost guarantee that the whole class will have an opinion about it.

Question: Do you think that the death penalty is justified for some crimes?

Introduction: "We agree with the question..."

Short summary of your entire presentation, i.e. your main points with examples, your drawbacks (what critics of your argument would say) and how you would answer your critics.

"We agree with the question because..."

"We will argue that..."

"We will show that..."

"We will discuss..."

Main Point 1: "We want to discourage serious violent crime."

Examples:

1. Terrorism.
2. Serial killers.

Both are examples of serious violent crime for which the threat of the death penalty could be used as a deterrent.

Main Point 2: "It will lead to a reduction in crime, so our streets will be safer."

Examples:

1. Statistical evidence, e.g. from the internet, library, etc.
2. "People have the right to live their lives without the fear of crime." Give examples using "real" people and situations, e.g. a 76 year-old grandmother, a single mum who lives on a council estate, an asylum seeker, etc.

Main Point 3: "It makes economic sense. Fewer people in prisons = money saved."

Examples:

1. "Tax money can be used for other more constructive things, e.g. schools and hospitals."
2. Statistical evidence, e.g. "More and more money is being wasted on building prisons." Describe how the money could be spent more effectively on other public services.

How to Give a Small Group or Individual Presentation (Example and Notes)

Drawback 1: "Some would say that..." e.g. "The state has no moral right to kill."

Your answer to this:

1. e.g. "Judges have wisdom to decide which serious offenders should be killed."
2. e.g. "The state is responsible for protecting its citizens from serious violent crime."
3. e.g. "We have to do something about serious violent crime. The reintroduction of the death penalty would send a powerful message to criminals."

Drawback 2: "Others would argue..." e.g. "Prison must rehabilitate as well as punish."

Your answer to this:

1. e.g. "Some serious criminals do not want to change and cannot be rehabilitated..." Show evidence, e.g. statistics showing repeat offender rates, etc.
2. e.g. Briefly restate your main points again: discourage serious violent crime, make streets safer, redistribute tax money more effectively, and so on.

Note: the "drawbacks" section means drawbacks to your argument, i.e. the case against your argument. It should be included to show that you are one step ahead of your opponents in the debate, because you have thought about their side of the argument from the outset. However, although in this section you are stating the other side of the argument, you should use this time to expose the weaknesses in their argument and to restate your main points to show that, by comparison, your argument is by far the most sensible one. In fact, your argument is the only rational choice! If both sides do this you should have a really excellent debate!

Conclusion: "We agree with the question..."

Repeat the short summary of your entire presentation that you used for the introduction, i.e. your main points with examples, your drawbacks (what critics of your argument would say) and how you would answer your critics. The deliberate repetition of your main points with examples during the presentation, as well as at the end, should ensure that your carefully thought-out message will be recalled by both your opponents in the debate and your audience.

"We agree with the question because..."

"As you have heard..." "We have argued that..." "We have demonstrated that..."

Finish with a memorable quote or statistic that will reinforce your main points.

Role Plays – Instructions

Students work in pairs or groups of three to develop and rehearse a short role play with three scenes, based on the information given to them on the handout, which is then performed to the rest of the class. They have to include the title of the outline somewhere in their role play, e.g. Family role play 1 (from Book 1): "You did that on purpose!" The role play can be fully acted out, with props and costumes, or be simply a dialogue that students perform whilst sitting at their desks, but students shouldn't be writing during this activity. Writing can be done at home. In Talk a Lot lessons the focus should be mainly on spoken English. The teacher should always ensure that students understand what they have to do and are confident with the vocabulary used on the role play handout before they begin. The teacher should insist that each group produces three different, distinct scenes, teaching them to think of the role play as three parts of a whole, with a through-line and a logical progression through the scenes, for example:

- Scene 1: Setting up the situation
- Scene 2: Action
- Scene 3: Result

To make this task more challenging, you could agree as a group that all role plays have to include particular things, as well as what is in the outline, for example:

- a) a person's name
- b) a place name
- c) an object (e.g. an aubergine or a giraffe's toothbrush)
- d) a certain phrase
- e) a prop
- f) a costume

The teacher could provide a costumes box and a prop box in the classroom with plenty of dressing up clothes or objects for students to use in their role plays.

If your students particularly enjoy doing role plays, they could try the role play extensions in Books 1 and 2, and those which are included with each handout (for Book 3 onwards), in addition to the role play outlines on the handouts. However, role play must be only one element of a Talk a Lot lesson, i.e. free practice. Make sure that in each lesson there is a balance of activities, for example: tests, sentence block building, sentence focus activities, word focus activities, and free practice activities.

It's fine too if students want to veer away from the outlines given on the handouts. The aim of the activity is for the students to put the flesh on the bare bones of the outlines. For example, they should suggest character names, place names, names of businesses, and so on. The suggested outlines are only there to get ideas flowing and to get students talking. The teacher could suggest new situations for role plays or more imaginative groups of students could think up new role plays of their own (based on the same lesson topic), using the blank template on p.10.4.

The Mood Chart

Use the mood chart on p.10.3 to add an extra dimension to the role plays. Print the page onto card, cut up the cards and put them into a bag. Each student picks one card – one mood – and they have to act out their role play using this mood exclusively. When watching each role play the audience have to guess which moods the actors have picked. In another variation, the audience pick the moods that they want to see used in a role play, or all the groups have to rehearse the same role play using different moods, and the audience have to guess what they are.

Note: the students could also add their own suggestions to the moods given on the Mood Chart.

Assessment

Assessment is performed by the teacher checking and correcting during the task, listening for errors that can be dissected later on in a group feedback session, giving individual as well as group feedback, and referring students back to:

- a) the grammar they are learning from forming the sentence blocks, and building sentences
- b) the pronunciation work they are doing using the techniques of connected speech and the IPA

Each student's achievement in this activity is also recorded as part of their overall lesson score (for both accuracy and effort) by the teacher on their course report.

Because this activity is drama-based, the audience could make their voice heard too, perhaps by giving marks out of ten for each role play based on:

- language accuracy
- effort
- imagination
- best costumes, use of props, lighting, sound, etc.

Or they could give thumbs up (1 or 2) or thumbs down (1 or 2). The audience feedback is just for fun and not to be recorded on each student's course report.

Focus on Connected Speech

What is Connected Speech? (Student's Handout)

The aim of spoken English is to communicate clearly and efficiently.

We can achieve this by:

- a) stressing the correct syllables in the sentence (see sections 12 and 13)
- b) putting the correct vowel sound on each stressed syllable (see p.18.6)

Example of Procedure

1. Starting sentence (from Book 2, "Cars"): David is clearing the ice from his car windscreen.

2. Identify content words: David clearing ice car windscreen.

3. Identify stressed syllables: Da clea ice car wind

4. Vowel sounds on stressed syllables: /ei/ /ɪə/ /aɪ/ /ɑː/ /ɪ/
(the sound spine)

- c) Once we have the sound spine – the most important sounds in a sentence – we can use connected speech techniques (see p.11.3) to join them together as tightly as possible

Connected speech is the term we use to describe a series of techniques that enable us to speak English quickly by joining together words and sounds. If you speak fluently, using the right vowel sounds and stressed syllables, whilst all the time employing the techniques of connected speech, your listener will understand you well and want to keep listening. If you speak in a stop-start or plodding manner, using the wrong stressed syllables – or no stress at all – and incorrect vowel sounds, listening to you will be a chore. It will be too tiring for your listener's ears and brain to keep listening; their attention will start to wander, and they may want to switch off and stop listening to you altogether.

When we speak in English, we don't pronounce words individually – One. By. One – but we join them together and speak with rhythm by stressing the vowel sounds on the stressed syllables of content words in a sentence. This allows us to speak quickly and fluently and be understood, instead of over-pronouncing every word by stating each sound in full, and giving every syllable and word the same level of stress. That would be the equivalent of me writing like this:

DO. YOU. THINK. THAT. THIS. WOULD. BE. A. BRILL. I. ANT. I. DE. A?

No, I thought not!

It's really important to understand and accept that learning the techniques of connected speech is an essential part of learning spoken English. Unless you really wish to end up sounding like a posh BBC Radio announcer from the 1930s, you should begin to use connected speech techniques in your own spoken English. The Connected Sentence Cards (see p.3.1) and Connected Speech Templates (see p.4.1) in Talk a Lot Elementary will give you plenty of practice in understanding and using the techniques of connected speech.

What is Connected Speech? (Student's Handout)

Understanding connected speech will also really help you when you're listening to English being spoken – particularly by that bothersome bunch of people who are so difficult to understand: native speakers! So go on, have a go!

As E. M. Forster once wrote in the wonderful novel Howards End: "Only connect."

Focus on Connected Speech

The Techniques of Connected Speech

The main techniques of connected speech are:

Glottal Stops	an empty space without sound, represented in the IPA as /ʔ/
Linking	syllables connect together
Assimilation	a sound changes
Contraction	a word is shortened
Intrusion	a new sound appears – /j/, /w/, or /r/
Elision	a sound disappears
R-linking	syllables connect with /r/ sound

They can easily be remembered using the mnemonic GLACIER.

Let's look at each one in turn:

Glottal Stops

The glottal stop, represented by /ʔ/ in the IPA, can replace the “t” sound /t/ before another consonant sound, or replace double “t”. Using a glottal stop instead of double “t” is particularly popular among young people, and can be heard in specific dialects and accents such as London-based accents. Lily Allen is a famous British singer who uses glottal stops a lot in her recordings instead of pronouncing the “t” sound /t/.

For example:

“butter” /'bʌt.ə/ becomes “buh-er” /'bʌʔ.ə/, with a very short pause replacing the “t” sound

“football” /'fʊt.bɔ:l/ becomes “fuh-ball” /'fʊʔ.bɔ:l/

Remember:

It's easier to use a glottal stop than to pronounce /t/ before a consonant sound. Not many English people actually say /'fʊt.bɔ:l/ where you can hear /t/.

Linking

Sometimes it's possible to link one word to the next by joining the sound at the end of the first word to the sound at the beginning of the second word.

For example:

“walked into” /wɔ:k d 'ɪn.tu:/ becomes “walk dinto” /wɔ:k 'dɪn.tu:/

Remember:

It's difficult for English native speakers to fully pronounce two consonant sounds together, e.g. the /k/ and /d/ in “walked” – especially within the space of one syllable, as here. By linking the words we can say them separately, whilst also stressing the correct syllables: walked into (stressed syllables are underlined). Linking occurs naturally when a vowel sound meets a consonant sound, and likewise when a consonant sound meets a vowel sound (see p.4.4).

Assimilation

Assimilation means adaptation or adjustment and occurs when two sounds meet that don't flow together easily, e.g. two consonant sounds. The speaker automatically changes one of the sounds to make the words easier to say, by moving their tongue and mouth into position so that they're ready to make the next sound. Let's look at the phrase "eleven minutes", for example. After I have said "eleven" my tongue is behind my front teeth if I pronounce the /n/ sound, which is the wrong position from which to form the next sound, which is /m/. I get around this by changing the /n/ sound to /m/, like this: /ɪ'lev.m 'mɪn.i?z/. (I also replace the last /t/ sound for a glottal stop, which makes the word even easier to say (see above).)

The consonant sounds that you need to watch are /t/, /d/, and /n/ (see table below for examples).

For example:

	before /m/, /b/ and /p/	examples:
/t/	/p/	"meet people" becomes "meep people"
/d/ changes to:	/b/	"good boy" becomes "gub boy"
/n/	/m/	"eleven minutes" becomes "elevem minutes" before /k/ and /g/	examples:

/t/	/k/	"got cancelled" becomes "gok cancelled"
/d/ changes to:	/g/	"made clearer" becomes "maig clearer"
/n/	/ŋ/	"own car" becomes "owng car"

	before /j/	example:
/t/ changes to:	/tʃ/	"great year" becomes "grey cheer"

	before /j/	example:
/d/ changes to:	/dʒ/	"walked yesterday" becomes "walk jesterday"

Remember:

The whole point of connected speech is to enable you to speak – and communicate – more quickly and efficiently. It is not necessary in spoken English to pronounce every single consonant! In written English it is, of course, important to spell words correctly with every letter in its correct place, but in spoken English fluency and natural speech is paramount, rather than trying to pronounce every single individual sound of every single word.

Contraction

Contractions are the short forms of verb structures, e.g. “she’s” instead of “she is”, or “it’d” instead of “it would”. In spoken English they enable us to say unstressed words (function words, which often have weak stress) quickly, so that the stressed syllables of the content words are emphasised. (See p.12.28 for a full list of contractions.)

For example:

it is > it’s; it has > it’s; you are > you’re; they had > they’d; we will > we’ll; he is not > he isn’t

Remember:

You. Don’t. Have. To. Give. Every. Word. And. Every. Syllable. In. The. Sentence. Equal. Importance. It. Will. Sound. Very. Strange. If. You. Don’t. Use. Sentence. Stress!

Intrusion

This is when a new sound is added between two words – /j/, /w/, or /r/. It happens when a vowel sound at the end of one word meets another vowel sound at the beginning of the next word (see also “R-linking” below).

For example:

see Andrew	becomes	see y andrew	/ˈsiːˈyændruː/
pay up	becomes	pay y up	/ˈpeɪˈyʌp/
snow and ice	becomes	sno w an dice	/ˈsnəʊ.wənˈdaɪs/
no idea	becomes	no w hy dear	/nəʊ.waɪˈdɪə/
blue elephant	becomes	blue w elephant	/ˈbluːˈwelɪfənt/
saw Ian	becomes	soar r ian	/ˈsɔːˈriən/

Remember:

It’s really hard for English native speakers to pronounce two vowel sounds together, so we sneakily slip in a /j/, /w/, or /r/ sound between the two sounds to make the phrase easier to say.

Elision

This happens when a /t/ or /d/ sound at the end of a word or syllable disappears, because it meets a mis-matching consonant sound at the beginning of the next word or syllable.

Focus on Connected Speech

The Techniques of Connected Speech

For example:

past life	becomes	pass life	/ˈpɑːsˈlaɪf/
rest stop	becomes	ress top	/ˈresˈtɒp/
bored boys	becomes	bore boys	/ˈbɔːˈbɔɪz/

Remember:

Try to pronounce the sounds /t/ and /l/ one after the other. What is your tongue doing? You're probably getting tongue-tied! How much easier it is, then, to say "pass life" instead of "past life". At the end of saying "pass" your tongue is in absolutely the right position to pronounce the /l/ of "life". How wonderful is that thing known as connected speech!

Note: elision also occurs in individual words, notably where consonant sounds /t/, /d/, or /n/ meet another consonant sound that doesn't link together smoothly. For example:

investment	/ɪnˈvest.mənt/	changes to	/ɪmˈves.mənt/
------------	----------------	------------	---------------

The first /t/ sound is lost so that the mouth can more quickly get to the next sound, /m/. (We also use assimilation to change the first /n/ sound to /m/, so that we can more easily pronounce the following consonant sound, /v/.) Elision often occurs in compound nouns, which are words that we've created by shoving together two shorter words, e.g. in "sweatshirt" /ˈswet.ʃɜːt/ we make the middle /t/ sound disappear so that we get "sweh-shirt" /ˈsweʃ.ʃɜːt/, with a glottal stop replacing the /t/ sound. Another example is "wildlife" /ˈwaɪld.laɪf/, which loses the /d/ sound to become "while-life" /ˈwaɪl.laɪf/. Here are some examples of compound nouns where elision removes the /t/ or /d/ sounds. (For more on compound nouns, see p.16.1.)

/t/ sound removed:

basketball	/ˈbɑː.skɪʔ.bɔːl/
flatmate	/ˈflæʔ.meɪt/
fortnight	/ˈfɔːʔ.naɪt/
network	/ˈneʔ.wɜːk/

/d/ sound removed:

breadknife	/ˈbreʔ.naɪf/
speedboat	/ˈspiːʔ.bəʊt/
birdbath	/ˈbɜːʔ.bɑːθ/
friendship	/ˈfren.ʃɪp/

R-linking

The /r/ sound at the end of a word isn't usually pronounced, unless the following word begins with a vowel sound, in which case the /r/ sound can be heard as a link between the two words.

For example:

"His mother isn't..." /hɪz ˈmʌ.ðə ˈɪz.nɪt/ becomes: "his mothe risn't" /hɪz ˈmʌ.ðə ˈrɪz.nɪt/

The Techniques of Connected Speech

Remember:

If we don't link "mother" with "isn't" using the /r/ sound, we have a problem: we have to say two vowel sounds together: /'mʌ.ðə'ɪz.nɪt/, which is unnatural for the English tongue. We don't like to say two vowel sounds together (see "Intrusion", above). It's why we have two indefinite articles and say "an egg" rather than "a egg", for example. R-linking also enables us to further stress the first syllable of the next word, "isn't", which has strong stress.

(Note: R-linking also occurs as intrusion, when an /r/ sound is added between two vowel sounds that have to be pronounced together (see above).

What is Sentence Stress?

Sentence stress is a natural part of spoken English and students should be encouraged to use it during Talk a Lot courses. English is a stress-timed language which is spoken with rhythm. This results from strong and weak stresses that are built into both individual words and sentences. How can students recognise stresses in a sentence? The main rules for sentence stress in a neutral sentence (one without special emphasis) are as follows:

- i) There are two kinds of word in most sentences: content words and function words. Content words are words that give the meaning in a sentence, such as nouns (e.g. bread), main verbs (e.g. eat; note: “be” is an exception because it is a main verb, but is always unstressed), phrasal verbs (e.g. put on), adjectives (e.g. sliced), adverbs (e.g. quickly), numbers, wh- question words (e.g. what), and negative auxiliary verbs (e.g. isn’t). Function words are words that are essential to make the sentence grammatically correct, but that don’t have any intrinsic meaning on their own, i.e. without content words. They are words such as pronouns (e.g. she, them), auxiliary verbs (e.g. “are” in “They are going...”), prepositions (e.g. in, on), articles and determiners (e.g. a, the, some), conjunctions (e.g. and), quantifiers (e.g. many), and the verb “be” when used as a main verb. English native speakers may automatically listen to the content words in a sentence whilst absorbing the function words almost subconsciously.
- ii) The strong stresses fall on the content words in a sentence while the weak stresses fall on the function words. If a word has a strong stress in a sentence it is spoken with more emphasis and volume, and more slowly than a word with a weak stress.
- iii) The time between the stressed content words tends to be the same, regardless of how many function words there are between them.

But does sentence stress matter? It’s a difficult area – why not just leave it out? It can be a difficult concept for students to understand – particularly if their first language is not stress-timed, but syllable-timed, i.e. in their first language all of the syllables in a sentence are spoken with more or less equal stress (e.g. French or Japanese). Native speakers of English speak quite naturally with sentence stress but if you asked one why they did this they would perhaps be unaware that they were even doing it, and at a loss to explain the rules (unless they had specifically studied the subject). Nevertheless, it is an important aspect of spoken English because when a student doesn’t speak with sentence stress – or uses incorrect sentence stress – they can be hard to understand, or difficult to listen to, even when what they’re saying is grammatically correct and really interesting – a situation that can be quite frustrating for students. Understanding sentence stress can also help students to get more out of listening to spoken English.

From p.12.6 you can see the sentence stress in all of the sentence block starting sentences from Books 1 and 2. The words in black are content words, and one of their syllables has a strong stress, whilst the words in grey are function words, and they have weak stress. There are many different ways that teachers can highlight sentence stress during the course of each lesson; below there are a handful of suggested activities to get the ball rolling. Let’s use a starting sentence from the “Music” topic in Book 2 as our first example.

What is Sentence Stress?

Example with a Starting Sentence

Marion is singing a song that was written by George Gershwin.

This sentence can be “translated” into content words (black) and function words (grey) as follows:

Marion is singing a song that was written by George Gershwin.

In this starting sentence the content words are: Marion (noun), singing (main verb), song (noun), written (main verb), George Gershwin (noun). The function words are: is (auxiliary verb), a (article), that (relative pronoun), was (verb “be”), and by (passive “by”). If you were to say the content words in order without the function words, your listener could probably work out what you meant:

Marion singing song written George Gershwin.

But if you were to say only the function words in order – “is a that was by” – your listener would be totally confused because there’s no meaning! Next, we look for the stressed syllables in the content words. (For more on word stress see p.13.1.)

Marion singing song written George Gershwin.
(Stressed syllables are underlined.)

If we look at the whole sentence again, now we can see the stressed syllables clearly:

Marion is singing a song that was written by George Gershwin.

The rhythm of the strong stresses can also be indicated like this:

Marion is singing a song that was written by George Gershwin.
● ● ● ● ● ●

If we add in the other syllables (in grey) we can see the whole sentence in terms of sentence stress:

Marion is singing a song that was written by George Gershwin.

Example with a Complete Sentence Block (from “The Human Body”, in Book 2)

Terry is showing his friends the stitches in his shoulder.
What

The eight sentences of the sentence block can be “translated” into content words (black) and function words (grey) as follows:

The stitches in his shoulder.

Is Terry showing his friends the stitches in his shoulder?

Yes, he is.

No, he isn't. Terry isn't showing his friends his holiday photos.

If you were to say only the content words, with rising intonation at the end of the yes/no questions, your listener would probably still get a good idea of your meaning:

Terry showing friends stitches shoulder.

What Terry showing friends?

stitches shoulder.

Terry showing friends stitches shoulder?

Yes

Terry showing friends holiday photos?

No, isn't. Terry isn't showing friends holiday photos.

The rhythm of the strong and weak stresses can be indicated like this (stressed syllables are underlined):

Terry is showing his friends the stitches in his shoulder.

Activities for Highlighting Sentence Stress

- The teacher models the sentences and students repeat afterwards individually, in pairs, or as a group.
- The students mark on their handout the words in a sentence or sentence block that are content (stressed) and function (unstressed).
- The students record themselves saying starting sentences or sentence blocks with correct sentence stress, then listen back and check their work.
- The teacher (or a partner for pair work) says a starting sentence or sentence block and the listeners have to write only the content words or only the function words from it in the correct order.
- The whole group (or pairs) have to recite sentence blocks (or individual sentences) as somebody claps, with the strong stresses falling on each clap and the weak stresses falling in between.

Focus on Connected Speech

What is Sentence Stress?

- The students have to form starting sentences or sentence blocks when they are given only the content words, or only the function words, and a given verb form.
- The students listen to songs, poems, or limericks and identify the content and function words; then practise repeating the lines with a partner or within the group.
- The students have to recite all the stressed words in a sentence block from memory.
- The students compile a list of content words and function words from a number of different sentence blocks, and put the words into groups according to their use, e.g. “noun”, “main verb”, “adjective”, “pronoun”, “conjunction”, “article”, etc.
- Mumbling game: the students have to say a starting sentence or sentence block, not omitting the function words completely, but mumbling them so that they are barely heard. This can demonstrate quite well how native speakers of English stress the content words – the words which have meaning – but glide over the function words as if they were of little or no importance. (Yet the function words are critically important, particularly in an English language examination situation, because they are the glue sticking the content words together.)
- The teacher writes the content words from one sentence on separate cards (you could use the template on p.12.29 of this book) and the students have to put them in order, then fill in the missing function words.
- Using some, or all, of the starting sentences (from p.12.6), students could look at the content words (in black) and record all of the:

- a) suffixes
- b) compound nouns

- Use the worksheets from pp.12.6-12.27 to create a staged lesson. For example:
 1. give students some sentence block starting sentences from Book 1 or Book 2
 2. ask them to circle all of the content words in each sentence
 3. give them pp.12.6-12.8 (or 12.17-12.19) so that they can check their answers
 4. ask them to underline the stressed syllables in each content word on these pages
 5. give them pp.12.9-12.11 (or 12.20-12.22) so that they can check their answers
 6. ask them to write the vowel sound above each stressed syllable on these pages
 7. give them pp.12.12-12.16 (or 12.23-12.27) so that they can check their answers

Note: The number of sentence block starting sentences that you use will depend on the level of your students and how confident they are with the concepts. This work could also be given for homework.

A Note about Emphasis

Sentence stress can vary according to what the speaker wishes to emphasise. If we wish to stress a particular word or phrase in a sentence, we should make several of the preceding syllables unstressed, so that the syllables that we do stress are emphasised. Let's look at a few examples:

Transcription of an Online Talk a Lot Lesson on Sentence Stress

Talk a Lot Elementary Book 3 – Unit 5: Airport

Introduction

What follows is a complete transcription of a free online lesson that was delivered by Talk a Lot author Matt Purland on Thursday 24th September 2009 at 1pm CET. He used the online teaching platform provided by <http://www.edufire.com> to deliver the lesson, which lasted about fifty minutes and was attended by eleven students, including Angela, Luba, and others who are mentioned below.

The lesson was interactive because the students were able to type answers to Matt's questions in a chat box that everybody could see on the screen. They were able to see Matt talking live on the screen, and get answers to their questions. As well as the live video of the teacher on the screen, the students could follow a Powerpoint presentation, which included material used during the lesson. The still shot from the lesson in progress (right) gives an example of what the participants could see.

The lesson was recorded and later distributed as an episode of the English Banana.com Podcast. You can download the .mp3 file and listen to this lesson in full by clicking this link:

[Podcast introduction] Hello. My name is Matt Purland. I'm an English teacher living and working in Poland. This is a recording of a free lesson that I delivered recently on www.edufire.com. We're using material from the Talk a Lot free spoken English course, which is available to download free from <http://www.englishbanana.com/talkalot/> If you'd like to attend the next Talk a Lot lesson please visit <http://www.edufire.com/englishbanana/> to find out the date and time. And I hope you'll be able to join us then.

Let's start our lesson today. We're looking at sentence stress. And the topic we're looking at is Airport, which is one of the topics in Talk a Lot Book 3. It's the latest one that's being written at the moment. What does it mean sentence stress? Sentence stress. Anybody? Type in the box if you know. What is sentence stress? Do you know? Or what is a sentence? Let's start with that. So type in the box if you know. So a sentence is a group of words. For example, let's start with this example.

"My name is Matt."

"My name is Matt." This is a sentence. It's a short sentence. Sentence stress is about which words in a sentence have stress; are said more strongly or louder than other words. So, in this sentence which words do you think are more important than the others? Which words are more important? So, Luba's saying "name" and "Matt". So in this sentence I would stress

Talk a Lot Elementary Book 3 – Unit 5: Airport

“name” and “Matt”. These are words which we call content words. They have some meaning. Or a dictionary meaning. I wouldn’t say for example:

“My. Name. Is. Matt.”

That’s everything stressed the same. But I would say, “My name is Matt.” Or even with contraction: “My name’s Matt”. OK. Let’s start at the beginning with this then. We’re going to look at content words. Content words are words in the sentence that have meaning; that have their own meaning in the dictionary. For example, if I said to you “name”, then you’d know what it means. “Name.” So content words are things like nouns, verbs, adjectives, adverbs, numbers, words that have meaning on their own outside the sentence.

Type in the box please, for example, some nouns. What does it mean noun? Type in the box just for example, any nouns. “Tree”. OK. “Sound”. “Mic”, or “microphone”. “Car”. “Computer”. “Water”. So these are nouns. Things we can either see or can’t see, such as abstract nouns, like “peace” or “sound”, is something we can’t see. “Freedom”. Good example. So nouns are things that we can either see or touch, or maybe things that are just abstract. OK. Like for example “freedom”.

Next one. Verbs. Type in the box some examples of verbs. Any verbs. “Speak”, “go”, “love”, “study”, OK. Any more? So, we’re talking about main verbs. The main action in the sentence. These are content words. Nouns, main verbs, such as the ones we’ve just heard.

Adjectives. What about adjectives? What are they? Adjectives. “Beautiful”, says Luba, “green”, “nice”, “slow”, “new”, very good. “Lovely”. So, what do adjectives describe? What do they describe? Adjectives describe nouns. Very good, Ed. Thank you. Nouns, main verbs, adjectives. These are content words. Words which have a meaning in the dictionary, and a meaning apart from the sentence.

What about then adverbs? Adverbs. Can you think of any examples of adverbs? “Slowly”, “well”, “fastly”? No, we can’t say “fastly”. “Fast” is better. “Nicely”. Ed’s saying anything with “-ly” suffix. Yeah. “Quick” can be adverb; “quickly” as well, “slowly”. OK. So what does an adverb describe? An adverb describes the verb. So, how we’re doing something. How we’re doing it. An adjective describes the noun. The things. And adverbs describe the verbs. OK. Numbers as well, I think we know what they are. I don’t need to say that. One, two, three, for example. Words that have a meaning on their own outside of a sentence. OK. Content words.

The other words we’re looking at are function words. Function words. Any examples? Maybe you already know about this. Function words. So, for example, prepositions, articles, auxiliary verbs, and verb “to be” – these are function words. Type in the box for me some examples of prepositions, just for example. Just for example. Prepositions. So, “on”, “at”, “from”, “under”; they’re describing where something is – the place or the time, maybe something like that.

Articles. What are articles? Articles, for example, “the”, “a”, and “an”. So we’ve only got three articles in English, thank goodness. Articles. Determiners. For example, “some”, “many” – determiners. What does it mean auxiliary verbs? Auxiliary verbs? “Do”, “be”, “have”. OK, these are good auxiliary verbs. Good examples. “Should” – so modal verbs as well. “Can”, “might”, “could”, “must”, but what’s the difference between auxiliary verbs and main verbs? [Pause.] Auxiliary verbs don’t mean what they usually mean, Luba. They don’t mean. What do they mean then? So what do they mean? [Pause.] Modal verbs are auxiliary. Oh, auxiliary means helping, doesn't it, helping. It's sort of assisting. Helping verbs. They help other verbs to make the tenses. To make the tenses. So if you making a tense with a sentence with present continuous you need to use "be" as auxiliary verb, like: "I am talking to you now". "I'm talking". "Be" is an auxiliary verb. Doesn't have any meaning in the sentence. It doesn't have any meaning, but it's just there to make the grammar. Just to make the grammar. OK, and the main ones are: "be", "have", "do", and then the modal verbs as well. OK.

Also function words, things like... verb "to be" – it's never stressed either, so we can include verb "to be" – even when it's a main verb we can use it as a function word. So, really this is the main point. This is the main point of the lesson. And in fact it's the most important point of any lesson to do with spoken English that I've ever taught, because it's the most critical thing to know, the difference between content words and function words. If we're just using all words together with the same level of stress, then our English will stay very strange, very static, very foreign. We need to know in a sentence which words are content words and which are function words. You can do this with any sentence. Find a sentence in English, look at it, and underline the content words. Nouns, main verbs, adjectives, adverbs, numbers, and any word that has a meaning apart from the sentence. Away from the sentence. And function words are the little words, the short words: prepositions, articles, determiners, auxiliary verbs, and verb "to be". These are words that are contracted and squeezed together. OK. So this is the introduction to the lesson. Let's look at the Powerpoint together. This comes from the title of the Talk a Lot Handbook, which you can download from <http://www.englishbanana.com>

"Success in spoken English lies in stress and vowel sounds." Stress and vowel sounds. OK? "Specifically, getting the correct vowel sounds on the correct stressed syllables in a sentence, and then joining them together."

So this is what we learn to do on Talk a Lot courses. And also through the Handbook, it gives you a lot of practice for doing this. The first thing we need to do in a sentence is identify, is find, content words and function words. OK. After we've done that we can look for the stress – the stressed syllable – in each content word. And after that look for the vowel sound. If we know that, then our pronunciation will really improve. And will be much clearer. If we don't know that, then our pronunciation and stress can be very mixed, and quite difficult to understand. Let's look at another extract from the book, Talk a Lot Handbook:

"There are two kinds of word in most sentences: content words and function words. Content words are words that give the meaning in a sentence, such as nouns (e.g. bread), main verbs (e.g. eat; note: "be" is an exception because it is a main verb, but is always unstressed), phrasal verbs (e.g. put on), adjectives (e.g. sliced), adverbs (e.g. quickly), numbers, wh- question words (e.g. what), and negative auxiliary verbs (e.g. isn't). Function words are words that are essential to make the sentence grammatically correct, but that don't have any intrinsic meaning on their own, i.e. without content words. They are words such as pronouns (e.g. she, them), auxiliary verbs (e.g. "are" in "They are going..."), prepositions (e.g. in, on), articles and determiners (e.g. a, the, some), conjunctions (e.g. and), quantifiers (e.g. many), and the verb "be" when used as a main verb."

So, these are the little words that fall in between the content words. These are the words that cause all the problems with grammar. With tenses. And really make things difficult for students of English. If we just had content words I think your life would be easier in the English class. OK, so let's continue then.

"The strong stresses fall on the content words in a sentence while the weak stresses fall on the function words."

OK. Sometimes we stress a function word if we want to stress something particular, so intonation means that I want to focus on something particular in the sentence. [But] I'm talking about everyday, normal stress without particular intonation.

I'll have a deep breath there! Let's continue then with the sentence from Airport. Airport. This is going to be the new topic from Talk a Lot, available next month I would imagine. These are sentence block sentences, so you can also use them to make sentence blocks, if you know how to do that.

"Graham flies about three or four times a year."

If you're using this as a sentence block, I think you could use maybe "How many?" "How many times does Graham fly...?" for example. Let's look at this sentence. This is a normal sentence isn't it? What tense is it, this sentence? What is the tense here? "Graham flies about three or four times a year". Present tense. OK, but which one? Present what? Present continuous? [Pause.] Present simple. Thanks, Gruba, for helping us. So, present simple. Graham flies... Listen to how I say it. And I will speak quickly, how I would normally speak to an English speaker: (rapid speech) "Graham flies..."

Can you hear how some of the words are stronger or louder than the others? Some of the words are stressed. Yeah, Hassan can. Looking at the sentence then we have to break down, try and imagine it in two groups: words which have stress – words which are content words – and words that are function words. OK. When you look at the sentence, try to imagine content words being bold, like black letters. Just try to imagine that now. Which words then are content words? "Graham". "Flies". "Three". "Four". "Times". "Year". OK. "Graham". "Flies". "Three". "Four". "Times". "Year". These are the content words. So which are the function words? Function words. "About." So, preposition. "Or", the conjunction. And also "a" – article. So, "About." "Or." "A." If I read you the sentence without these function words, can you still understand me?

"Graham flies three four times year."

Can you understand the meaning of the sentence? Yes, Luba can. Ed can. OK. So these are the most important words in the sentence. These have meaning. These carry the meaning of the sentence. "Graham flies three four times year". These are the words we want to hear in the sentence: nouns, main verbs, numbers, adjectives, adverbs, you know, this kind of thing.

Let's look at the words that we missed out. Function words. "About", "or", "a". If I said to you, "Hey, Angela, about or a!" Do you understand me, what I mean? [Pause.] Yes? So, some confusion here. [Pause.] No. Exactly. So, if I just said to you: "About or a", it's not a sentence, because there's no meaning. There are no words that have any meaning in this sentence. It's just function words. OK. Good, Angela. So, there's no verb. We always have to have a verb in an English sentence. There's no noun. There's nothing. There's no meaning. Good. So, “Graham flies three four times year”. These words have meaning, and so the content words are stressed in the sentence. The content words are stressed, and the function words are not stressed.

What does it mean... what does it mean then? [Pause.] I have to look for the stress in each content word. The stressed syllable. If the word has more than one syllable, I need to find which one is stressed. So, Graham. Graham. Graham. How many syllables are there? Graham. Two syllables, thank you Cristina. So, Graham. Which one is stressed. Which one is louder than the other? Graham. Graham. DUH-duh. So, I'm stressing the first. Very good everybody. I'm stressing the first syllable. It's something like this: big O, small o. [The stress pattern in the word Graham = Oo.] If I want to show it like that. Graham. DUH-duh. DUH-duh. “Graham flies three four times year”. OK. The rest of this is quite simple because all the other words – content words – have only one syllable. So the stress is on the whole syllable. “Graham flies about three or four times a year”.

It's not about saying it quickly, and speaking quickly, it's not really. Although you can speak quickly if you want to. It's about stressing the right syllables. Stressing the right syllables. That means not stressing function words, articles, prepositions, but stressing nouns, verbs, and so on. Content words. And if you've got a word that's longer than one syllable, looking for the stressed syllable. Graham. I don't say Gra-HAM, Gra-HAM, Gra-HAM. “Gra-HAM flies...” No. Not Gra-HAM flies, but GRA-ham. So, it's the name of somebody. It's somebody's name, Charles. Graham. It's a male person. It's a man. I can't say Gra-HAM. Gra-HAM! “Gra-HAM flies...” No. Because the accent is on the first syllable. OK. So if I get the wrong syllable for the accent, or stress, it makes it harder to understand me. If I'm telling you, “Gra-HAM. Gra-HAM flies...” What? What did you say? What did you say? “Gra-HAM?” What, “grey”, as in the colour? “Ham”, as in the meat? What do you mean? Accent is so important in English. It's so important. And it leads to a lot of confusion, if we're using the wrong stress, or the wrong accent.

You can find out where the strong stress is in every word by checking in your dictionary, and it will show you the phonetic spelling, and which syllable is stressed. So, GRA-ham. GRA-ham. OK. “Graham flies about three or four times a year”. The other words in the sentence – the other words, that's the function words – I have to say more quickly. I have to say more quickly, or more quietly, with less stress. I have to make a contrast between them. You know, three or four, three a four. “A”. I'm only saying “a”. I'm not pronouncing “orrrr”. “Three orrrr four times aaaa year”. No. “Three a four”; “three a four”; “three a four times a year”. “A year”. “A year”. Very quickly with the function words. “Graham flies about three a four... three a four... three a four...” “A”. I'm using the weak stress schwa sound for “or”. It's the weak form of the word. If you look in the Talk a Lot Handbook you will see a long list of weak forms. I can do this, not because I'm an English teacher (that I'm allowed), but I can do it because these words are not stressed. They're function words. I have to squeeze them together. I can't get rid of them. I can't delete them, and just say, “Graham flies three four times year”. I can't really delete them, because then it would be a mistake. It would be an error. But, I can reduce them... is the word. Reduce. Make them shorter. Make them quicker. So they don't stand out. “Three or four times a year”. “Three or four times a year”. “Three a four”. “Three a four”. “Three a four”.

Reduce, reduce, reduce. That's what you should do with function words in a sentence. Try with your own sentences. Say them more quickly; but it's fine to do it when you're speaking in English because they're not stressed, and they shouldn't have stress. "Three. Or. Four. Times..." No. "Three a four times a year". Can you hear the rhythm? "Three a four". Imagine like the mountain range. Up, down, up, down, up, down. English goes up and down. Du dUH, Du dUH, Du dUH. Let's think of a good example for that. For example, this sentence. Let's try saying this. Try saying it to yourself:

"I'd like to eat a plate of sweets."

Du dUH, Du dUH, Du dUH, Du dUH. OK. So there's some similarities in Spanish, Angela's saying here. "I'd like to eat a plate of sweets." Du dUH, Du dUH, Du dUH, Du dUH. What's the main verb here? What's the main verb? Eat. OK, and also...? So we've got two. Two verbs. Two main verbs. "Like" and "eat". Which are the nouns? Type in the box. "Plate". Good, Hassan, and "sweets". OK. So all the other words are not stressed. Look at the sentence and try... and in your mind make the words, the main content words, in bold, if you like. So, we've got "like, eat, plate, sweets". If I just said this to you, you could probably understand me, what I meant, right? "Like, eat, plate, sweets". Maybe you don't know who, because there's no pronoun, and there's no person. But this demonstrates the rhythm of English, and how the function words can fall into the holes, into the gaps between the content words. "I'd like to eat a plate of sweets." Du dUH, Du dUH, Du dUH, Du dUH. And of course, it doesn't always sound like that, exactly. Because we've got many combinations of words and syllables. But this is for example. OK. So, if you are just saying: "I'd. Like. To. Eat. A. Plate. Of. Sweets. Teacher! I'd. Like. To. Eat. A. Plate. Of. Sweets". "Would. You? O. K. Then. Here. You. Are. Then". It's not English. It's not English, because there's no rhythm and there's no sentence stress – that's why I said earlier, the most important lesson you can learn from this is how to separate content and function words, and notice then that content words have stress. Function words don't. OK. So, that's another example.

"Graham flies about three or four times a year."

Let's continue a little bit more with Graham, and then we'll take some questions towards the end. Now you can see in this sentence, the content words are bold. "Graham flies about three or four times a year". I'm not saying it particularly fast. I'm not speaking quickly, but I'm stressing the right words, the right syllables. I'm not saying "Gra-HAM". "Gra-HAM flies..." because it's the wrong stress. "Graham". "Graham flies..." "Graham flies about three or four times a year". So I've identified the stresses.

"Graham flies about three or four times a year."

It's maybe not the best example, because all the other words are one syllable. But you can see here some other examples. [On the Powerpoint presentation students could read the other sentence block starting sentences from the Airport unit.] Underline the stressed syllable. Let's look at the second example. Number two. So you've got the words which are content words in bold. The function words are grey. The stress in each content word is underlined:

"Keith is flying economy class today, because he can't afford an upgrade."

And this is standard in all Talk a Lot materials. You could download any unit from Book 3 and you will see this. So the stressed syllables here: "Keith", "fly", "con", "class", "day", "can't", "fford", "up". If you're getting this right, if you're getting the stressed syllables right, your pronunciation will be good, and the person listening will understand you. If you're getting some of these stresses wrong, like here, "e-con-O-my class..." What? I didn't hear the right stress. So you put up a barrier between me and you. "e-con-O-my"? No, "e-CON-o-my". "Economy class". Oh, right. Economy class. So you have to underline the stress and use the correct stress. "Flying". "Flying". It has to be the first syllable, because "-ing" is never stressed. It's a suffix, and these are never stressed. We go into detail in the handbook about this. "Flying". "Playing". "Looking". "Seeing". "Reading". "Going". It's always going to be stressed on the first syllable. I can't saying "fly-ING". "-ing" is a suffix and it's not stressed. "e-CON-o-my class". "Today". "Today". Not "TO-day". "TO-day, teacher!" No. "T". [pronounced like the consonant sound /t/] "T". Even without a vowel sound. The function words can be reduced. We can reduce them. "T-day". "Because he can't afford an upgrade". "An up-GRADE"? No. "UP-grade". "UP-grade" is correct, in the same way that "GRA-ham" is correct, or "e-CON-o-my class" is correct. "e-con-O-my"? No, it's not "e-con-O-my", for example. "e-CON-o-my". It's four syllables. You've got a one in four chance of getting it right, if you don't know the stress. But when you're learning the word, learn the stress as well. Don't just guess it. Look in your dictionary, see the phonetic spelling and which syllable is stressed. It'll be marked with the little mark that looks like an apostrophe. I can't show you here, because we haven't the phonetic symbols, but "e-CON..." "e-CON..." The "con" will have the little mark in front of it, like an apostrophe. "e-CON-o-my".

The ultimate goal here is to look at the sentence and identify the vowel sounds. That's why I'm talking about vowel sounds. Each stressed syllable has a vowel sound. The stress is on the vowel sound:

/eɪ/ /aɪ/ /i:/ /ɔ:/ /aɪ/ /ɪə/
Graham flies about three or four times a year.

/i:/ /aɪ/ /ɒ/ /ɑ:/ /aɪ/ /ɑ:/ /ɔ:/ /ʌ/
Keith is flying economy class today, because he can't afford an upgrade.

"GRA-ham". "Gray". "Ay". "Graham". If I get confused and say "GRA..." [as in the short vowel sound /æ/] "GRA-ham". Then what? I don't understand you. It's a barrier between us. "GRA-ham"? No, the correct vowel sound is "ay". So it must be "GRA-ham" [the diphthong sound /eɪ/]. "Keith is flying". "Flying". "I". "I" [the diphthong /aɪ/]. And you can see here the phonetic symbols. "I". If you said "Keith is fleeing", "fleeing", then it's a different verb. The verb "to flee", and it means running away. So, straight away we've got confusion if you don't know the vowel sound. You should learn for every content word the stressed syllable and the vowel sound. I can't stress it enough! "Keith is flying economy". "Economy". Probably you will guess the "o" sound [the short vowel sound /ɒ/] because of the spelling. "Economy class today". "Today". "To die"? "To die"? It's a different verb in English – "to die" – isn't it? It means to stop living. "To die"? No. "Today". "Today". It doesn't matter about the "t" because there isn't a vowel sound at all, because it's not stressed, it's weak form, it's functional. "T". [The consonant sound /t/] "Today". But "day" has to be the "ay" sound. "Day" has to be the "ay" sound. "Because he can't afford an upgrade". "UP-grade". "OOP-grade"? "OOP"? "OOP"? Like "book"? [The short vowel sound /ʊ/] No. "Up". "Up". Like "uh", the sound in the phonetic alphabet that is "uh". [The short vowel sound /ʌ/]

That's why we said at the beginning of the lesson, "success in spoken English lies in stress and vowel sounds. Specifically getting the correct vowel sounds on the correct stressed syllables in the sentence." Practise on your own, or with a friend, or with your teacher. Take any English sentence. Separate it into content words and function words, and then look for the stress on the content words – which syllable is stressed? Only one per word. Only one has the strong stress. Then think about what is the vowel sound. Try to learn the phonetic alphabet. It will take you maybe one week, if you're using flashcards, but after that it'll be useful every day for a lifetime. So you have to learn that. Think about what is the vowel sound, and then practise it. And then all the other syllables in between can be squeezed together. Just squeeze them; reduce them as far as possible, and then you'll be stressing the correct things, and your pronunciation will improve. This is really an introduction, and after this there's nothing more to do than simply practise it and try it.

Focus on Connected Speech

What is Word Stress?

Every word in English has one syllable with a stronger stress than that of the others. English is a stress-timed language, which means that we speak with rhythm, pronouncing the stress in each content word. For example, in the word “teacher”, the first syllable is stressed and the second syllable is unstressed. (See p.12.1 for more on content words.) The strong stress always falls on a vowel sound. But which syllable and sound is stressed in each word?

There are many complicated and obscure rules for finding word stress in English words, like:

“Two-syllable adjectives (without prefixes) are always stressed on the first syllable (or sometimes the second if the word begins with a vowel), unless there is an “R” in the month, or it’s later than 8pm in the evening on a market day (during a wet fortnight in Wales)...” etc.

OK, I’m only joking, but perhaps you can see what I’m trying to say here! Students can, of course, explore word stress in more detail at their leisure (the bibliography on p.x could help). However, in this handbook I would like to highlight a few dead-cert rules:

1. First Syllable Drift

In English most words tend to be stressed on the first syllable. Around 83% of the 1,000 most commonly-used words have Germanic origin, which is where this tendency comes from¹. For example, of the 201 single discussion words with two or more syllables in Talk a Lot Elementary Book 2, 154 were stressed on the first syllable – that’s 77%. For more analysis of discussion words from this book, see p.13.3.

2. Suffixes

Suffixes are the end parts of words, like -able (believable), -ful (helpful), -ing (eating), -ment (arrangement), etc. Suffixes are almost always unstressed, so if students find a two syllable word with a suffix, e.g. “playing”, they can be 99% sure that the first syllable is stressed: playing = /'pleɪj.ɪŋ/ As if this information wasn’t already a big enough help for working out word stress, there are many common suffixes where the strong stress is always on the preceding syllable, for example: -able, -ation, -asion, and -ment. For more examples, see p.15.4. As with most things in English grammar there are a few exceptions to the rule, e.g. words ending in certain suffixes are always stressed on the suffix (see p.15.4). For example, words ending in “-ee”, like referee /ref.ə'ri:z/, are always stressed on the suffix. For more on suffixes see p.15.1.

3. Compound Nouns

Compound nouns are nouns (things) that consist of two words together, for example: baseball (base + ball), guidebook (guide + book), popcorn (pop + corn), and wheelbarrow (wheel + barrow), etc. Compound nouns are almost always stressed on the first syllable, so if students find a new word which is a compound noun, like “strawberry”, they can be 99% sure that the first syllable is stressed: strawberry = /'strɔ: b.ri:z/ There are, of course, a few exceptions to the rule, for example: loudspeaker /laʊd'spi:k.ə/ and policewoman /pə'li:s.wʊ.mən/, which are both stressed on the second syllable. For more on compound nouns see p.16.1.

4. Prefixes

Prefixes are the beginning parts of words, like anti- (which means against), multi- (which means many), pre- (which means before), and tele- (which means remote). There aren't really any word stress rules for prefixes: sometimes they are stressed, sometimes they are not. We can see some patterns, though, for example a group of two-syllable homographs which can be both verbs and nouns, and which are stressed on the first syllable if they're nouns, and on the second syllable if they're verbs (see p.14.3). Despite prefixes not helping us much with working out word stress, it's generally good for students to learn how to identify them, partly because they can give clues about the meanings of words (e.g. "mini" = small, so "minibus" = small bus). There are some activities about prefixes in section 14 (from p.14.1).

In summary then, most words in a normal English sentence will fall into one of three categories:

- i) one-syllable words – the stress falls on the only vowel sound in each word
- ii) words with suffixes – for two syllable words the stress falls on the first syllable; for longer words, we know that the suffix is almost always unstressed
- iii) compound nouns – the stress almost always falls on the first syllable

For examples of this, see the analysis of discussion words from Talk a Lot Elementary Book 2 on p.13.3, and the analysis of a newspaper article on p.13.7. Students can use this information to help them when working out word stress. When you factor in that most English words are stressed on the first syllable it's possible to correctly guess the word stress of many words that you don't already know. In short, if a student is unsure of where the word stress falls, and they don't have time to look up the word and check the stress mark in their dictionary, they should go for the first syllable to have a good chance of getting it right.

Analysis of Discussion Words in Elementary Book 2

(Reference: Talk a Lot Elementary Book 2, pp.147-151)

Aim: to identify word stress in each of the discussion words in Book 2. Note: all of the words are nouns.

Summary

Of the 407 discussion words in Talk a Lot Elementary Book 2, there are:

- 146 words with 1 syllable

We can discount these because we know where the word stress falls – on the whole word.

- 60 phrases

We can discount these because we are looking at the word stress of individual words. If you wanted to, you could look at these phrases separately and analyse the word stress of the words, both separately and together.

There are 201 individual words with two or more syllables

- 155 words which are stressed on the 1st syllable (78%)
- 35 words which are stressed on the 2nd syllable (18%)
- 10 words which are stressed on the 3rd syllable (5%)
- 1 word which is stressed on the 4th syllable (0%)

Discussion Words

155 words (78%) stressed on the 1st syllable including 32 compound nouns (in boxes), which we know are usually stressed on the 1st syllable accident, animal, ankle, arson, audience, autumn, badminton, ballet, baseball, battery, birthday, blackmail, boxing, bridesmaid, butterfly, caterpillar, championship, childhood

Suffixes

See p.13.6 for an analysis of suffixes in discussion words from Book 2.

Discussion words that are not stressed on the first syllable

The 46 words which are not stressed on the first syllable can be categorised into five groups. It would be wrong to state that these kinds of words will never be stressed on the first syllable, but it's possible to see some patterns that can be helpful to keep in mind when looking for word stress in a group of vocabulary words:

1. Nouns that come from a verb (10) accelerator (verb: accelerate), appeal (verb: appeal), arrest (verb: arrest), conductor (verb: conduct), defendant (verb: defend), detective (verb: detect), divorce (verb: divorce), performer (verb: perform), solicitor (verb: solicit), supporter (verb: support)

Analysis of Discussion Words in Elementary Book 2

(Reference: Talk a Lot Elementary Book 2, pp.147-151)

2. Foreign words that haven't yet conformed to the 1st syllable drift in English (10)

giraffe, gorilla, piano, tsunami, umbrella, violin, Olympics, hippopotamus, kangaroo, thermometer

3. "-teen" numbers which can be stressed on either syllable, depending on the context* (7)

thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen

Note: if we were counting: "Thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, etc." we would stress the numbers on their first syllables, but if we were using a number in isolation, e.g. somebody asked us "How old are you?" we would naturally reply "Nineteen", with the stress on the second syllable, rather than "Nineteen".*

4. Words which conform to their own suffix rule* (16)

See p.15.4 for more on this*

For example:

Rule 1: the stress is always on the syllable before the suffix:

- employ-ment, engage-ment
- educa-tion, gradua-tion, qualifica-tion, predic-tion, separa-tion
- adolesc-ence
- annivers-ary
- automat-ic, athlet-ics
- geog-raphy, biog-raphy
- music-ian
- redund-ancy

...or Rule 2: the stress is always on the suffix:

- refer -ee

5. Uncategorisable – i.e. the stress is just like that for no apparent reason (3) affair, eleven, environment

Summary of Method for Finding Word Stress in Discussion Words

- Take away one syllable words
- Take away phrases (e.g. "post office")
- Identify words with suffixes
- Identify words that are compound nouns
- Notice that most words are stressed on the first syllable
- Look for patterns within words which are not stressed on the first syllable (see 1-5 above)

Discussion Words with Suffixes in Elementary Book 2

Of the 201 individual words with two or more syllables, 156 (78%) have suffixes, which we know are almost always unstressed. This can help us as we try to work out the word stress for each discussion word. On this page you can see all of the words with suffixes, grouped by suffix. The main groups are shown in boxes, with suffixes shown in bold.

Working Out Word Stress – Analysis of a Newspaper Article #1

This analysis demonstrates the prevalence of one-syllable words, words with suffixes, and compound nouns in modern English. If we can identify these kinds of words, we can more easily identify word stress because:

- one-syllable words are stressed on the whole word
- suffixes are almost always unstressed
- compound nouns are almost always stressed on the first syllable

We analysed a recent article about holidays from a quality British broadsheet newspaper. 86% of the words used fell into one of the three categories above. We are unable to reprint the article here, but the results of our analysis are as follows. (Note: all examples are from the author of this book, not from the original article).

Total words in the newspaper article extract: 521

- 67% There are 346 one-syllable words. If it's a content word, e.g. "go" or "quick", the stress is on the whole word. If it's a function word, e.g. "the" or "at" it will (almost) always be unstressed, and if spoken aloud the weak stress form will be used, if applicable (see p.17.1 for more on weak forms)
- 17% There are 88 words with suffixes, e.g. "wint -er" and "look -ing"
- 2% There are 12 compound nouns, e.g. "fortnight" and "grapefruit"
- 14% There are 75 other words, including words with prefixes, e.g. "a- bout" and "com- pete"; compound words, e.g. "deep-frozen" and "school-days"; and non-dictionary words, e.g. names of people and places, such as "Derbyshire" and "Kate"

88 words with suffixes

- | | |
|--------------|--|
| -ing | e.g. looking, eating, getting, running |
| -er | e.g. leather, winter, clever, another |
| -ly | e.g. quickly, newly, slowly |
| -y | e.g. happy, ready |
| -le | e.g. whistle, fizzle |
| -tion | e.g. examination, position |
| -ic | e.g. aromatic, automatic |

Other suffixes found in words from the article

-able, -age, -al, -ant, -bour, -by, -ed, -en, -es, -ey, -ies, -ion, -ment, -n't, -o, -or, -ous, -rict, -try, -ture, etc.

12 compound nouns

e.g. fortnight, grapefruit, sideshow, wardrobe, guidebook, etc.

Action

Why not get your students to do a similar analysis of a short text or newspaper article? Ask them to look for:

- one-syllable words
- words with suffixes
- compound nouns

List of Noun/Verb Homographs

Homographs are words which are spelled the same, but have different meanings. They often have different sounds too.

The following two-syllable words can be used as either nouns (with the strong stress on the 1st syllable) or as verbs (with the strong stress on the 2nd syllable).

For example, the noun "transport" /'træn.spɔ:t/ – stressed on the 1st syllable – means a method of getting somewhere, whilst the verb "transport" /træn'spɔ:t/ – stressed on the 2nd syllable – means to take somebody or something somewhere.

Note: the words are grouped by order of prefix. The main groups are shown in boxes, with prefixes shown in bold.

Common Suffixes and What they Indicate

- A suffix comes at the end of a word.
- Suffixes are usually unstressed.
- Adding a suffix changes the word type, e.g. a noun changes into a verb.

Below are some examples of how a root word can change type when a suffix is added:

Root Word	Word Type	+ Suffix	Changes to	Word Type believe	verb	-able	believable	adjective participate	verb	-ant	participant	noun (person)
walk	verb (infin.)	-ed	walked	verb (past participle)

Weak Forms – Information Sheet

Notes:

- The weak forms of many function words are commonly used in spoken English instead of strong forms (in Standard Pronunciation, dialects, and accents).
- All words that have weak forms usually act as function words.
- All words that have weak forms have only one syllable – they are monosyllabic (apart from “any”).
- Most of the weak forms use the vowel sound schwa /ə/.
- If we use strong forms when we should use weak, we sound overly formal and it's harder for people to understand us, because the sentence stress is incorrect (see p.12.1). Communication is reduced.
- If a function word comes at the end of a sentence we usually use its strong form, e.g. “What are you looking for?” /fɔ:/ or, “Who are you writing to?” /tu:/
- If we want to show emphasis or contrast, we can vary intonation by using strong forms where we would normally use weak forms, e.g. “Where’ve you been all day?” /bi:n/

Learn the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA)

Why Bother Learning the International Phonetic Alphabet?

It's simple...

...if you can read the sounds of English with the International Phonetic Alphabet, you will be able to correctly pronounce every single word in an English dictionary. You will become a more independent learner, because you won't need to rely on asking your friends or teacher – or native speakers – “How do you say this word?” It may seem like a daunting challenge when you first look at the chart on p.18.6, and learning the IPA will take a bit of effort – like just about every other worthwhile activity in life – but once you've learned to recognise the symbols, and which sounds they represent, you'll remember them and be able to use this valuable skill as you continue learning English throughout the rest of your life.

You don't have to learn the entire IPA anyway – that's not necessary. Just the sounds of English, and sounds that your language has but which English does not have. The IPA covers all of the languages of the world, but you need only focus on learning the 48 sounds of English.

As you learn, you will better understand the differences between pronunciation in your language and English. For example, I teach English in Poland, where all of my students speak Polish (as you would expect). In Polish there are only 8 vowel sounds, while in English there are 23. In Polish there are no long vowel sounds, like /u:/ or /ɑ:/ and no diphthongs, like /eɪ/ or /əʊ/. Before I began to teach the IPA in my classes, one of the most common causes of pronunciation mistakes used to be when students tried to speak English using only the 8 vowel sounds of Polish, instead of the 23 vowel sounds of English. Their words sounded clipped and unnatural, without any long vowel sounds or diphthongs. They spoke like that because that was how they understand language to be: “If it's like that in my language, it must be like that in English too.”

You will also be able to focus in on problem areas in your spoken English by identifying which specific sounds you are having problems with. For example, my Polish students find the two consonant sounds /θ/ and /ð/ really difficult, because they don't have these sounds in Polish. They didn't learn to make these sounds when they first learned to speak. Furthermore, they don't want to stick their tongues out between their teeth when they speak, as /θ/ and /ð/ demand! Other sounds that are difficult for them include the vowel sounds /ɜ:/ and /ʌ/, so we always spend more time practising words with these sounds.

A note about the schwa

This sound, /ə/, which is called a schwa, is worth spending extra time studying, because it is the most common sound in English. It's the weak stress sound of the articles “a” /ə/ and “the” /ðə/ and appears in the unstressed syllables of the majority of English words with more than one syllable. (If you don't believe me, have a look at the Discussion Words from Books 1 and 2, from pp.18.29-18.38, and see how many schwas you can count!)

So, how do I go about learning the IPA?

If you're learning on your own, you could use the flashcards (starting on p.18.9) to memorise the sounds, and test yourself, as well as using the worksheets (starting on p.19.1) and tests (starting on p.19.17) that are included in this handbook. Look online on the Talk a Lot pages for our .mp3 file “The Sounds of English...”, on which you can hear each sound being spoken. Learning the sounds of English with the IPA is one of the best things you could do to improve your level of spoken English.

...or how do I teach it to my class?

You could follow the lesson plan on p.18.3 for guidance on how to introduce the sounds of English with the IPA to a group of Elementary-Pre-Intermediate learners, and then use the materials in this handbook to consolidate learning (see p.19.1 onwards). The IPA may not seem like an easy topic to teach, but your students will enjoy it, and later on they'll thank you for covering it with them. If you give them the chance to learn the sounds of English with the IPA, their spoken English will improve as their understanding of the language – including stress and vowel sounds – increases. You'll be giving them a gift that keeps on giving. A gift that's for life, not just for one lesson! Good luck!

Learn the Sounds of English with the IPA – Sample Lesson Plan

Activity Type:	Introduction to the sounds of English with the IPA
Level:	Elementary - Pre-Intermediate
Skills:	Speaking & Listening; Pronunciation
Class Size:	Whole group lesson, e.g. ten students in a group
Time:	1 hour
Aim:	To introduce the sounds of English with the IPA; to lay the foundations for further study with the IPA
Materials:	x1 IPA handout (p.18.6) per student, whiteboard and pens; students have their notebooks and pens

Note: this lesson focuses on teaching the vowel sounds of English, with only a little focus on the consonant sounds. This is because most of the consonant sounds can be guessed at, because they are encountered in English already (e.g. /g/, /t/, /d/, etc.). The vowel sounds are more difficult to learn from scratch, so we spend more time with them during this lesson, although we do also look at some of the scarier-looking consonant sounds (e.g. /ŋ/, /tʃ/, /ʒ/, etc.) towards the end of the lesson.

Procedure:

1. Give out the handouts as students come into the class. This gives them time to look at them, comment (e.g. "On no!"), and get ready for the lesson.
2. Tell students that you're going to learn the sounds of English with the IPA. Write on the board:

Vowel sounds

Your language: ____
English: ____

Elicit how many vowel sounds there are in your students' first language (or different students' first languages for mixed nationality groups), and write it on the board. Make sure you know that answer before the lesson, e.g. in Polish there are 8 vowel sounds. Elicit from students how many vowel sounds there are in English (23). No doubt they will be surprised at the disparity between the two numbers. In English there are a lot of vowel sounds! Explain that lack of knowledge of English vowel sounds causes many mistakes in pronunciation.

3. Explain why you are doing this activity today. When I did this, I read a short text in Polish (which my friend helped me to write, because I'm an elementary rather than fluent Polish speaker). The text helped the students to understand the aims of the lesson. It went something like this (in Polish):

“If you know the phonetic alphabet, you know how to pronounce words. This alphabet gives you power. Power!”

(Here I emphasised the word “power” (“moc”) in Polish for comic effect, as well as to make my point – “Da wam moc! Moc!”)

“You will be able to speak better in English. Polish is a phonetic language. You write like you speak.”

(Here I stopped to emphasise this important concept. I pointed out that, for example “The letter ‘a’ in Polish is always pronounced /æ/, and the letter ‘o’ in Polish is always pronounced /ɔ/. Pronunciation in Polish is generally easier than in English.” They students agreed. I asked them in Polish: “Is English a phonetic language?” The students grimaced and shook their heads, laughing, because no, of course English is most definitely not a phonetic language!)

“English is not a phonetic language. We write differently to how we speak.”

(I illustrated this by writing the following words on the board: “my”, “high”, “pie” and eliciting the pronunciations. I wrote each word phonetically and explained that in the dictionary there are two spellings for each word. The normal spelling is usually no help at all for working out the sound of the word. By contrast, the phonetic spelling gives us the sound of the word. You could use more examples to show that although words can have exactly the same sounds, the spellings can be completely different. Students sometimes ask why this is, but the lesson’s too short to go into the answer in much detail, although you could explain that English has developed from many different languages over hundreds of years, which has helped to push spellings and sounds apart. See pp.18.19-18.28 for more on sounds and spellings.) different spellings:	same vowel sound:

my	/maɪ/
high	/haɪ/
pie	/paɪ/

“If you don’t know how to say a word, you can check in the dictionary and use the phonetic alphabet to find out the sounds.”

4. Once everybody understands why they’re doing the lesson, write on the board:

8 short vowel sounds | 5 long vowel sounds | 10 diphthongs

Drill each group of sounds in turn. I asked my students to listen, repeat, and write notes. I read each sound loudly and clearly four times, with students repeating each time, and writing down notes about each sound to help them remember it. They were able to use letters from Polish to represent each sound. Give a good, clear model of each sound, or use the .mp3 file from the Talk a Lot website as your classroom model. Use examples of words that contain each sound, e.g. the ones on the handout, or different words that your students will know.

Highlight sounds that are the same in your students' first language and in English. For example, the sound /ɒ/ is the same in Polish and in English. In English /sɒk/ means "sock", that we wear on a foot, whilst in Polish /sɒk/ means "juice" that we drink from a bottle. Let your students have fun and enjoy making the sounds, which may be new for many of them. My Polish students love saying the long vowel sounds, or the guttural grunt schwa /ə/ (that comes from the belly), and the classroom is filled with laughter, as well as the vowel sounds of English!

5. Explain that diphthongs are "double sounds" or two sounds together. For example:

/e/ + /ɪ/ = /eɪ/

Encourage students to try saying the two sounds together, getting quicker and quicker until they arrive at the diphthong /eɪ/. Show students how the mouth has to move when pronouncing a diphthong – changing from the first position (for the first sound) to the second position (for the second sound). Spoken English is a work-out for the mouth and tongue!

6. After modelling and drilling short vowel sounds, long vowel sounds, and diphthongs, go back to the beginning and ask your students to listen and repeat each sound (about four times). Here you may be able to spot some errors in speaking the sounds, that you can correct straightaway.

7. At this point I always stop and congratulate the group: "Well done! You can do it. You see, you can make all of the vowel sounds in English. You don't need to use all of these sounds in your language, but you do need to use them all in English."

8. Spend a few minutes looking at the consonant sounds. Explain that it is most important to be able to recognise the vowel sounds, because they are what cause the most confusion and the greatest number of errors in pronunciation. Elicit from students – by saying them out loud with them – that consonant sounds are either voiced (with voice) or unvoiced (without voice). Two-thirds of the consonant sounds are the same in English as students would expect them to be, whilst some are different and need closer study:

- 16 consonant sounds that students are likely to know and recognise already:

/b/, /g/, /v/, /t/, /d/, /p/, /k/, /s/, /h/, /r/, /w/, /m/, /n/, /l/, /f/, and /z/

- 9 consonant sounds that are different from how we expect, and that need extra study:

/θ/, /ð/, /ʃ/, /tʃ/, /j/, /ŋ/, /ʒ/, /dʒ/, and /x/

9. Take general feedback from students and answer any questions they might have. There's been a lot to take in! Explain that this lesson is only an introduction, that they're not expected to learn all forty eight sounds of English in one hour, and that you will continue to look at the sounds of English with the IPA throughout the course. Perhaps give out one set of flashcards (see p.18.7) to each student so that they can practise memorising the sounds of the IPA at home.

Learn the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA)

Flashcards – Instructions

Students can use the flashcards on pp.18.9-18.18 for learning and memorising the forty eight sounds of English with the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA). The aim is to know the sounds by heart, so that they can look at any of the IPA symbols on its own and say the sound straight away.

Instructions

1. Print the pages back to back onto thin card, in the following order:
 - print pages 18.9 and 18.10 back to back
 - print pages 18.11 and 18.12 back to back
 - print pages 18.13 and 18.14 back to back
 - print pages 18.15 and 18.16 back to back
 - print pages 18.17 and 18.18 back to back
2. Cut out the cards and laminate them, if possible, for extra durability.
3. For students: use the cards to learn the sounds by quickly testing yourself in spare minutes of the day, e.g. on the bus, at lunchtime, when you're watching TV, etc.
4. For teachers: use the cards to test your class for a short period of time every day, just to keep the symbols and sounds in your students' minds, or give a set of cards to each student and encourage them to practise in pairs or small groups. You could use some or all of the activities below.

Key to Abbreviations

SV	= short vowel sound
LV	= long vowel sound
D	= diphthong
VC	= voiced consonant (i.e. your vocal cords vibrate when you say it; feel your throat as you say a sound to find out whether it's voiced or not; if it vibrates, it is voiced!)
UC	= unvoiced consonant (your vocal cords don't vibrate when you say this kind of sound)

Note: it's well worth getting students to learn the IPA sounds with an extra layer of detail, so that they learn the concepts above. For example, that /e/ isn't only a vowel sound, but that it's a short vowel sound; or that /n/ isn't only a consonant sound, but it's a voiced consonant sound that makes your vocal cords vibrate.

Suggested Classroom Activities

I made my own flashcards like these to learn and memorise which sound each symbol represented, when I was training for my Trinity College Cert. TESOL ten years ago, but there are lots of other ways in which you could use them beyond simply learning quietly at home:

- a) Put all of the cards on the table – simple side up – in front of your students. Say a sound, and the first to find the right card is the winner. Or, say “voiced consonant” or “long vowel sound”, etc. (as above) and the first to find one is the winner.

Flashcards – Instructions

- b) Show a card with a sound on it and students have to say a word each that includes this sound.
- c) Students have to put several of the cards in order to make a simple word, e.g. “cat” =

- d) Or you could ask students to spell out their first name, or the make of their car, or their first pet’s name, etc., or one (or more) of the current unit’s discussion words, using the cards. You may need a few sets of cards to be able to do this.
- e) Try this fun game for two students working in a pair (it could also be adapted for two small groups battling each other). Each student has half the cards from the set (25 cards each). They hold them in their hands in a (shuffled) pack so that the other student can’t see which cards they’ve got. The first student produces the first card and their partner has ten seconds (or five, if your group is at a good level!) to say an English word that contains that sound. If they are correct they get the card, and put it in a separate pile from the pack in their hands. If they are wrong, or can’t think of a word, the original student gets to keep the card, again putting it in a separate pile. Play alternates between the two students and continues until the students don’t have any cards left in their hands. The winner will be the student with the most cards at the end of the game (or at the end of an agreed period of time, e.g. fifteen minutes). A variation to make the game harder would be to insist on two words (or more) for each sound, or to get the students to write the words using the IPA, as well as saying them.
- f) Use the rhyming words listed on the worksheets from p.18.19 to demonstrate how the same sounds in English can be achieved with very different spelling patterns. You could make the important point that English is not a phonetic language, and rather the spelling of a word in English often bears little or no relation to the sounds that it contains.
- g) Or use the rhyming words to get students saying lots of words with the same vowel sound out loud. You could even get them to write sentences using as many words which have the same sound in them as possible, for example:

Sound: /i:/

Sentence: “Pete’s feet feel the need for speed each week.”

or:

Sound: /eɪ/

Sentence: “Jane’s Danish mate made it plain that her place in Spain was a waste of space.”

Why not collect together the funniest or longest sentences and make a classroom display, or book, or better still, email them to us at EnglishBanana.com so that we can put them on the Talk a Lot pages! Similarly, you will doubtless find lots more new ways for using these flashcards. If you would like to share them with other teachers and students, please do email them to us and tell us what worked for you.

Spelling and Sounds – Consonant Clusters

A consonant cluster is a group of two or more consonant letters together in a word. For example, in the word “brilliant”, “br” is a consonant cluster, as is “ll”, and also “nt”. Consonant clusters are also sometimes known as “consonant blends”. Focusing on consonant clusters and vowel clusters (see p.18.48) is useful if you want to look at some of the differences between spelling and sounds in English words.

Consonant clusters can occur at the beginning (an initial consonant cluster), in the middle (a medial consonant cluster) or at the end of a syllable (a final consonant cluster). For example, in the word brilliant – /'brɪl.jənt/ – which has two syllables, there is a consonant cluster at the beginning of the first syllable (“br”), at the end of the first syllable (“ll”), and at the end of the second syllable (“nt”). They can also occur in the middle of a syllable, for example the consonant cluster “ch” in the middle of the word “ache”.

We can include consonant digraphs within the term “consonant clusters”. A consonant digraph is where two consecutive consonant letters in the spelling of a word are used together to make a single sound. For example, in the word “know”, “kn” is a digraph which represents a single sound: /n/. There are also digraphs which make vowel sounds, for example, in the word “beach”, “ea” is a digraph which represents a single vowel sound: /i:/ (see p.18.48).

There are 21 consonant letters in the English alphabet, and 25 consonant sounds in spoken English. Therefore we need some consonant digraphs to represent consonant sounds because there are more consonant sounds than consonant letters. For example, there is no single letter in English that represents the sound /ʃ/. We need to use a digraph – two consonant letters together – and we end up with “sh” to represent /ʃ/. Similarly, there is no single letter that represents the sound /ð/. Therefore we need to use a digraph – two consonant letters together – and we end up with “th” to represent /ð/. Confusion can occur because the digraph “th” also represents another, different consonant sound: /θ/.

Part of the reason for the existence of digraphs – where two letters make one sound – is that English is an old language, and over hundreds of years the pronunciation of different words has changed. Some sounds that used to be pronounced in words are no longer pronounced, although the spelling has remained the same. Some used to be pronounced, but aren't any more. For example, up until the mid-17th century “knife” was pronounced in Old English as a three-syllable word, with the /k/, the /n/, and the final vowel sound all heard, like this: /k'nɪf.ə/.

As we have seen in our study of connected speech (see p.11.1), consonants don't like to rub up against each other, and elision (where we lose a consonant sound) or assimilation (where a consonant sound changes) often occur when two consonant sounds meet, to make the syllable or word easier to pronounce. So it is no surprise then that the longer the consonant cluster, the more difficult it will be to pronounce, and the more likely it will be that either elision or assimilation take place. For example, try saying: “twelfths” out loud. This word crowbars seven different consonant letters into one syllable, which in turn produces six distinct consonant sounds: /t w e l f θ s/ ! Another example of a problematic word is “crisps”, which is pronounced: /kɪɪps/. Try to pronounce all of the five distinct consonant sounds (in two consonant clusters) in just one syllable. Tricky!

Spelling and Sounds – Consonant Clusters

Generally speaking most consonant clusters are only two or three letters long. The longest initial consonant cluster can be three letters long, e.g. “spr-” in the word “sprint”, whilst the longest final consonant cluster will be generally four letters long, e.g. “-rst” in the word “firsts”. Perhaps the prize for the longest consonant cluster would have to go to the word “rhythm”, which is solely made up of consonant letters – six to be precise! However, “rhythm” cheats as a consonant cluster, because it actually has two vowel sounds – the “y” acts as the vowel sound /ɪ/ in the first syllable, which is stressed, and the second syllable can have either the schwa sound (weak stress) or no vowel sound: /ˈrɪð.əm/ or /ˈrɪð.m/.

Adverbs are a group of words that can have long consonant clusters at the end, e.g. exactly. Elision is likely to occur in such a cluster, for example “exactly” will often be pronounced without the /t/ sound, like this: /ɪɡˈzæk.li/ rather than /ɪɡˈzækt.li/. It would be too much unnecessary effort to try to pronounce the /t/, sandwiched as it is between two other consonant sounds. I say unnecessary because the most important sound in this word is the vowel sound on the stressed syllable, the /æ/ sound. This sound must be pronounced clearly, whilst the consonant sounds are less vital to communication.

Consonant clusters can be divided into five categories:

1. Consonant Digraphs
2. Consonant Digraphs with Double Letters
3. True Consonant Clusters
4. Consonant Clusters Ending with /s/ or /z/
5. Consonant Clusters in Compound Words

1. Consonant Digraphs

Some consonant clusters are digraphs, which are two letters together in the spelling of a word that combine to make a single sound. Note that most consonant digraphs end with the letter “h”. (When three letters come together to form a single sound, e.g. “-tch” in the word “fetch” – which represents the sound /tʃ/ – it is known as a trigraph.)

Here are some examples of initial consonant digraphs. (Note: you may wish to add your own examples in the space provided.)

Spelling and Sounds – Consonant Clusters

Here are some final consonant digraphs which occur where the letter “r” is silent because it is helping to make a vowel sound (see also vowel clusters on p.18.50).

digraph: sounds like: for example: my example(s):

rn	/n/	earn, turn, western, learn	_____
----	-----	----------------------------	-------

rt	/t/	hurt, heart, art, start, alert	_____
----	-----	--------------------------------	-------

Just to confuse you, here’s a consonant cluster where “r” is pronounced. This is not a digraph, because both of the letters are pronounced, but rather a true consonant cluster:

c/cluster: sounds like: for example: my example(s):

ry	/ri/	dairy, eery, diary, hairy, bury	_____
----	------	---------------------------------	-------

2. Consonant Digraphs with Double Letters

These consonant clusters are digraphs that comprise a pair of identical letters, which make a single sound when said together. Most consonant letters can be doubled, although doubles with “h”, “j”, “q”, “w”, “x”, and “y” are not natural in English. They usually occur in the middle of a word, although some, like “ff” in “cliff” come at the end. They never occur at the beginning of a word, unless the word has originated from a foreign language, for example “llama” from Spanish or “Lloyd” from Welsh. Here is a full list of consonant digraphs with double letters:

3. True Consonant Clusters

“True” consonant clusters are phonetic because they are pronounced in the same way as they are spelled. For example, “br” in “bread” is pronounced in the same way as the phonemes that it represents: /br/. In true consonant clusters we pronounce all of the sounds. Note that the consonant clusters below in bold type are all good examples of when the consonant sound /r/ is pronounced in an English word. This is helpful to know, because so often in spoken English the letter “r” in a word is not pronounced, since it’s only there to help make a vowel sound, for example in the words: “car”, “more”, and “your” (see also p.18.50).

Here are some examples of true initial consonant clusters:

c/cluster:	sounds like:	for example:	my example(s): bl	/bl/	blood, blend, black, blown	_____
br	/br/	bright, bring, brush, brilliant	_____ cl	/kl/	clear, close, clothes, clever	_____
cr	/kr/	cry, crime, crow, crop, crumb	_____
dr	/dr/	drink, drop, drive, drip, dreary	_____

st	/st/	stay, stop, stink, stolen, sty	_____
str	/str/	strange, stroppy, street, strict	_____
tr	/tr/	tropical, trench, train, triumph	_____

Here are some examples of true final consonant clusters:

c/cluster:	sounds like:	for example:	my example(s): ly	/li/	only, lonely, truly, rarely	_____ mp	/mp/	hump, bump, clamp, damp	_____
mpt	/mpt/	exempt, contempt, dreampt	_____
nch	/ntʃ/	munch, lunch, bench, stench	_____
nd	/nd/	end, stand, mend, ground	_____
ndy	/ndi/	windy, candy, handy, sandy	_____
ny	/ni/	tiny, meany	_____

...and here are a couple that are neither initial nor final consonant clusters:

¹ Although “qu” is technically a consonant and a vowel together, the sounds that it produces – /kw/ – are both consonant sounds.

c/cluster:	sounds like:	for example:	my example(s): lv	/lv/	salvage, delve, shelves	_____
ng	/ndʒ/	orange, arrange, impinge	_____

4. Consonant Clusters Ending with /s/ or /z/

These are consonant clusters that end with an “s”, representing either the sound /s/ or /z/ at the end of a plural noun, for example:

c/cluster:	sounds like:	for example:	my example(s): nts	/nts/	plants, accounts, rents	_____
rds	/dz/	records, birds, cards, chords	_____
rs	/z/	colours, rivers, sisters	_____
ts	/ts/	sweets, oats, boats	_____

We’ve already seen earlier on in this handbook how adding an “s” sound – /s/ – or a “z” sound – /z/ – at the end of a word makes it easier for us to say the next sound if it’s a consonant sound (see p.3.9). The importance of /s/ and the very similar /z/ as linking sounds in connected speech in English cannot be overstated. These linking sounds occur very frequently in English because of grammar rules to do with using “s”. If you think about it, we use “s” as a letter at the end of words far more frequently than we do other letters, simply because of the following grammar rules:

1. “s” is added to the end of most nouns to make them plural, e.g. “one cat, two cats”, or “one knife, two knives”
2. “s” is added to the end of nouns (after an apostrophe) to indicate possession, e.g. “John’s car”, or “the girl’s book”
3. “s” is added to the end of verbs to make the third form, e.g. “I read, he reads”, or “you put”, “she puts”. It is also worth noting the “s” endings of the third form of the four most common verbs in English (the first three of which are also very common auxiliary verbs):

Verb: BE

Third Form: he is, she is, it is and the contractions he’s, she’s, it’s

Verb: HAVE

Third Form: he has, she has, it has and the contractions he’s, she’s, it’s

Verb: DO

Third Form: he does, she does, it does

Spelling and Sounds – Consonant Clusters

Verb: GO

Third Form: he goes, she goes, it goes

Can you imagine what would happen if we used /t/ instead of /s/ or /z/ as a linking sound in each of these situations? The consonant sound /t/ is often dropped at the ends of words (see p.11.5), because it is difficult to pronounce together with another consonant sound. If we used it in the above rules instead of /s/ or /z/ (which connect well with all other consonant sounds) the phrases produced would be much harder to say, because they wouldn't flow together well. For example, we would have to say: "John't car", instead of "John's car", which would make a problem because the /t/ sound at the end of "John't" wouldn't flow well with the next consonant sound (the /k/ sound at the beginning of "car"). Or what about "she't going", instead of "she's going"? Again, it would be much harder to pronounce. In fact the result would be tongue-twisting on a massive scale! In the same way, having to pronounce "he readt bookt", instead of "he reads books" wouldn't flow, because /t/ – or indeed any other consonant sound – wouldn't enable the same easy flow that we achieve by using /s/ or /z/.

5. Consonant Clusters in Compound Words

In compound words, strange consonant clusters can occur, which are not "true" consonant clusters. This is because two separate words have been joined together to make a new word, meaning that the final consonant cluster from the first word has to sit side by side with the initial consonant cluster from the second word. Here are some examples:

c/cluster:	sounds like:	for example:	the two words are:
tchb	/tʃb/	switchboard	switch + board
ffh	/fh/	cliffhanger	cliff + hanger
ndf	/ndf/	grandfather	grand + father
ndbr	/ndbr/	groundbreaking	ground + breaking

As we have seen, it is common when consonant sounds meet for elision or assimilation to take place (see also Connected Speech, p.11.4). So, for example, we wouldn't pronounce the whole mouthful of consonant sounds in the middle of "groundbreaking": /'graʊnd.brɛɪ.kɪŋ/, because it would be too difficult in rapid speech to pronounce the final consonant cluster "-nd" next to the initial consonant cluster, "br". On the contrary, we would automatically employ elision and lose the /d/ sound, changing the word into: "groun-breaking" /'graʊn.brɛɪ.kɪŋ/ – which is far easier to pronounce.

Spelling and Sounds – Common Consonant Clusters

A consonant cluster is a group of two or more consonant letters together in a word. They can be initial (at the beginning of a word), medial (in the middle of a word), and final (at the end of a word). Focusing on consonant clusters and vowel clusters (see p. 18.48) is useful if you want to look at some of the differences between spelling and sounds in English words. Consonant clusters can be divided into five categories:

1. Consonant Digraphs (two consonant letters together make a single sound) – INITIAL:

digraph:	sounds like:	for example:	my example(s): ch	/tʃ/	cheer, champion, change	_____
gn	/n/	gnat, gnaw, gnome	_____
kn	/n/	know, knife, knitting	_____
ph	/f/	photo, pharmacy, pharaoh	_____
sc	/s/	science, scissors, scimitar	_____
sh	/ʃ/	sheep, shine, shock, shed	_____
th	/θ/	thick, Thursday, thanks	_____
th	/ð/	this, that, brother, there, the	_____ wh	/w/	what, why, where, wheel, whip	_____
wr	/r/	writing, wrestler, wrong	_____

FINAL:

digraph:	sounds like:	for example:	my example(s): ch	/tʃ/	beach, coach, roach	_____
ck	/k/	black, track, pick, flock, luck	_____
gh	/f/	cough, trough, rough, enough, tough	_____
mb	/m/	comb, tomb, aplomb, plumb	_____
ng	/ŋ/	along, going, eating, meeting	_____
sh	/ʃ/	finish, trash, Spanish, fish	_____
th	/θ/	tooth, youth, bath, path	_____

2. Consonant Digraphs with Double Letters – MEDIAL:

digraph:	sounds like:	for example:	my example(s): bb	/b/	robber, sobbing, hobble	_____
cc	/k/	soccer, occur, stucco	_____

Spelling and Sounds – Vowel Clusters

A vowel cluster is a group of two or more vowel letters together in a word that represent a single vowel sound. For example, in the word “road”, “oa” is a vowel cluster that represents the sound /ɔʊ/, whilst in the word “shoe”, “oe” is a vowel cluster that represents the sound /u:. In the same way, “ar” in the word “car”, is a vowel cluster that uses a silent “r” to help make the vowel sound /ɑ:. The reason we have vowel clusters is simple: there are 23 different single vowel sounds (vowel phonemes) in spoken English, but only 5 single vowel letters in written English. We need vowel clusters to represent in spelling all of the different vowel sounds. For example, the letter “a” on its own can make the sound /æ/ when sandwiched between two consonant sounds, for example in the word “cat” – /kæt/ – but there is no single letter which can make the very common vowel sound /u:/. We have to use a vowel cluster – in this case “ue” – to represent this sound on paper.

Vowel clusters can occur anywhere in a word – at the beginning (initial), as in “out”; in the middle (medial), as in “please”; and at the end (final), as in “true”. Focusing on vowel clusters and consonant clusters (see p.18.39) is useful if you want to look at some of the differences between spelling and sounds in English words. (See also Rhyming Words, pp.18.19-18.28.)

Vowel clusters can be divided into eight categories:

1. Vowel Digraphs
2. Vowel Trigraphs and Quadgraphs
3. Vowel Clusters that end with “-r”
4. Other Vowel Clusters with “r”
5. Vowel Clusters with “w”
6. Vowel Clusters with “y”
7. Vowel Clusters with “gh”
8. Vowel Clusters with Other Consonant Letters

What follows is a comprehensive list of vowel clusters, with the sounds that they represent, grouped by letter in alphabetical order. (Note: you may wish to add your own examples in the space provided.)

1. Vowel Digraphs

Vowel digraphs are two vowel letters together in the spelling of a word that represent a single sound (one vowel phoneme). For example, in the word “meat”, “ea” is a vowel digraph that represents the sound /i:/, whilst in the word “meet”, “ee” is a vowel digraph that also stands for the same vowel sound: /i:/. This kind of thing can lead to a lot of confusion between spelling and sounds in English!

ui	/ɪ/	build, building, guilt	_____

Most of the vowel sounds of English (18 out of 23) are represented by these 18 different vowel digraphs. The sounds not represented are: /æ/, /i/, /ɜ:/, /eə/, /aʊə/. The last three sounds are represented by vowel clusters that use “r” (see below).

2. Vowel Trigraphs and Quadgraphs

It is possible, though fairly uncommon, to find more than two vowel letters together in an English word. A group of three letters that make a single sound is called a trigraph. For example:

trigraph: sounds like: for example: my example(s):

eau	/əʊ/	beau, eau de toilette ¹	_____
-----	------	------------------------------------	-------

eou	/ə/	outrageous, contagious	_____
-----	-----	------------------------	-------

iou	/ɪə/	industrious, harmonious, tedious	_____
-----	------	----------------------------------	-------

A group of four letters that makes a single sound is called a quadgraph. For example:

quadgraph: sounds like: for example: my example(s):

ueue	/u:/	queue	_____
------	------	-------	-------

3. Vowel Clusters that End with “-r”

The “r” in the spelling helps to make the single vowel sound. Note: the consonant sound /r/ is not pronounced.

Spelling and Sounds – Common Vowel Clusters

A vowel cluster is a group of two or more vowel letters together in a word that represent a single vowel sound. They can be initial (at the beginning of a word), medial (in the middle of a word), and final (at the end of a word). Focusing on vowel clusters and consonant clusters (see p.18.39) is useful if you want to look at some of the differences between spelling and sounds in English words. Vowel clusters can be divided into eight categories:

1. Vowel Digraphs (two vowel letters together make a single sound)

digraph:	sounds like:	for example:	my example(s):
ai	/eɪ/	paid, wait, fail, paint, gain	_____
ea	/i:/	read, appeal, lead, clean, leaf, steal	_____
ea	/e/	read, bread, dreamt, dead, dread	_____
ee	/i:/	wheel, peel, kneel, heel	_____
ei	/i:/	receive, deceive, receipt	_____
ie	/aɪ/	tie, die, lie, pie	_____
oa	/əʊ/	oak, foam, loaf, encroach, road	_____
oa	/ɔ:/	broad, abroad	_____
oe	/əʊ/	toe, hoe, woe, foe, goes	_____
oe	/u:/	shoe	_____
oo	/u:/	school, tool, fool, choose	_____
oo	/ʊ/	good, book, took, rook, hood	_____
ou	/aʊ/	sound, loud, proud, round, house	_____ ui	/aɪ/	guide, guidance	_____
ue	/u:/	blue, true, sue	_____

2. Vowel Trigraphs and Quadgraphs

eau	/əʊ/	beau, eau de toilette ¹	_____
iou	/iəʊ/	industrious, harmonious, tedious	_____

3. Vowel Clusters that End with “-r” (the consonant sound /r/ is not pronounced)

Spelling and Sounds – The Magic “e” Rule

In one-syllable words that end with an “e”, the other vowel is almost always long and sounds the same as it does in the alphabet. For example:

“a” in “made” sounds like:	A	/eɪ/
“e” in “these” sounds like:	E	/i:/
“i” in “smile” sounds like:	I	/aɪ/
“o” in “phone” sounds like:	O	/əʊ/
“u” in “huge” sounds like:	U	/ju:/

This is known as the magic “e” rule. Note: the “e” is not pronounced – it is a silent letter. It applies to each of the five vowel letters in written English, although there are more words for “a”, “i”, and “o” than for “e” or “u”. With “u”, some of the words include the /j/ consonant sound, for example, “cute” /kju:t/ and “tube” /tju:b/, but some don’t, for example, “flume” /flu:m/ and “rule” /ru:l/.

Magic “e” words can be found in lots of different word groups, for example, there are nouns (e.g. “face” and “bike”), verbs (e.g. “close” and “came”), adjectives (e.g. “cute” or “wide”), and adverbs (e.g. “late”) in our list (see p.18.64). It is useful to know about the magic “e” rule when studying pronunciation, because many common words follow these spelling/pronunciation patterns.

There are some words that are exceptions to the rule (as we must expect in English), which are important to remember, because some of them are very common words, for example:

awe blue bore cheese come core done

fore give gone have here live (verb) lose love move none one please pore shone some sore

sure there vogue were wore

The magic “e” rule also applies in longer words that end with an “e”, for example “complete” and “suppose”, but not in all longer words that end with an “e”, for example, in two-syllable words that end with “-le”, like “little”, or that end with “-ce”, like “justice”.

Words with magic “e” are common in everyday English. If you read any short English text, such as a newspaper article, an email, or a reading text in an English coursebook, you will be sure to find some of them. Why not try it as an exercise and underline the ones that you find. See p.18.64 for a list of 250 common English words that obey the magic “e” rule (in alphabetical order), and the same list ordered by final consonant on p.18.65.

There are many word pairs which are fun to focus on, where the silent “e” changes a short vowel sound to a long vowel sound, and a new word is created, for example:

When the other vowel is “u”, the magic “e” changes the short sound /ʌ/ to the long sound /ju:/

cub	cube	hug	huge	tub	tube
-----	------	-----	------	-----	------

The rule for magic “e” words and suffixes is that if the suffix starts with a vowel letter, we lose the magic “e” from the spelling. For example:

Suffix:

- -ing (-ing forms)
- -ed (regular past forms)
- -er (comparative forms)
- -est (superlative forms)
- -en (verbs)

Examples:

hope > hope -ing > hoping race > race -ed > raced close > close -er > closer tame > tame -est > tamest wide > wide -en > widen

but, with suffixes that start with a consonant letter we keep the magic “e”, for example:

- -ly (adverbs) live > live -ly > lively
- -ful (adjectives) grate > grate -ful > grateful
- -ment (abstract nouns) amaze > amaze -ment > amazement

How to Pronounce the “th” Sounds in English

1. What are the “th” sounds in English?
2. Why are they so difficult to pronounce?
3. So, how can I pronounce the “th” sounds in English?

1. What are the “th” sounds in English?

“th” is a digraph – two letters together that represent one sound. “th” can also be called a consonant cluster – two consonants together in the spelling of a word. A “th” digraph can come at the beginning of a word, e.g. “think” and “though”, in the middle of a word, e.g. “author” and “clothe”, or at the end of a word, e.g. “wealth” and “with”. Or in a combination of positions, e.g. “thousandth”.

“th” represents either of two different phonemes (single sounds) in English. It can be either: /θ/ in “thick” and “thin”, or /ð/ in “this” and “that”.

The /θ/ sound is unvoiced. This means that when I make this sound, no sound is heard from my vocal cords. There is no vibration in my throat because my vocal cords do not vibrate. Try putting your fingers over your throat when you make this sound. You shouldn’t be able to feel your vocal cords vibrating.

The /ð/ sound is voiced. This means that when I make this sound, a sound is heard from my vocal cords. There is vibration in my throat. Try putting your fingers over your throat when you make this sound. You should feel your vocal cords vibrating gently.

“th” very occasionally represents a /t/ sound, especially in proper nouns, e.g. Thames, Thailand, Esther, Thandie, Theresa, Thompson, thyme, apartheid.

English words that have the /θ/ sound are generally content words. For example, nouns (like “thief”, “thumb”, “tooth”, and “wealth”), verbs (like “thank”, “think”, and “throw”), adjectives (like “thirsty”, “thermal”, and “thoughtful”), adverbs (like “thoroughly”, “thankfully”, and “threateningly”), and numbers (like “three”). Most ordinal numbers contain the /θ/ sound, for example, “fourth”, “fifth”, and “sixth”.

English words that have the /ð/ sound are generally function words. For example, pronouns (like “their”, “theirs”, “them”, and “themselves”), determiners (like “this”, “that”, “these”, and “those”), conjunctions (like “whether” and “though”), prepositions (like “with” and “without”), and time words (like “then”, and “thereafter”). All comparative phrases contain the /ð/ sound, thanks to the word “than” being included after the comparative adjective, e.g. “stronger than”.

As you can see, many very common words in English contain one or other of these sounds. A good example is the definite article “the”, which is so ubiquitous (“Article before a noun!”) that it can be heard in almost every sentence in English.

How to Pronounce the “th” Sounds in English

If you don't believe me about how common words with “th” sounds are, try the following exercise: take any page of a novel or text book, count the number of lines, then count how many lines don't have a word with “th” in the spelling. When I tried it, with a few different pages from a biography that I was reading, I found, on average, that only eight out of thirty-seven lines on a page would be without a “th” word. The most common “th” word was, of course, “the”.

If we study word frequency lists we can see how common “th” words are in everyday spoken and written English. In an analysis of the Oxford English Corpus of over a billion words, carried out by Oxford Online¹, we can find twelve “th” words in the top 100 most frequently used English words:

1. the	39. their
8. that	70. other
15. with	71. than
21. this	72. then
26. they	79. think
38. there	96. these

Of these twelve words, eleven have the /ð/ sound, and only “think” (shown in bold) has the /θ/ sound. We can safely say, then, that the voiced /ð/ sound is far more common than the unvoiced /θ/ sound.

The Dolch Basic Sight Vocabulary is a list of 220 English words that appear frequently in written material. Out of the 220 Dolch words (plus ninety-five Dolch nouns), there are twenty-one “th” words. Fifteen of them have the /ð/ sound, and only six have the /θ/ sound (shown in bold, below). This further underlines the importance of being able to pronounce the “th” sounds correctly, and /ð/ in particular.

[In no particular order:] The, that, there, they, this, with, them, then, their, these, those, together, brother, father, mother, thank, thing, three, think, both, birthday.

2. Why are they so difficult to pronounce?

These phonemes (sounds) simply don't exist in many languages, e.g. in Chinese, Vietnamese, and Polish. Whilst English native speakers learn them from their parents from before they are born, ESL students have to start from scratch, cold. Consider this example: I can't roll my r's, but a native speaker of Polish can do it effortlessly. They have learned to do it naturally, as a result of listening to and absorbing the sounds of the language that has surrounded them since before they were born. I have to learn to do it, or to “trick it”.

In many accents in English, e.g. teenagers' street language, English native speakers don't bother pronouncing “th”. They use substitute sounds, e.g. /f/ instead of /θ/ , and /v/ instead of /ð/. For example:

How to Pronounce the “th” Sounds in English

fink = think fanks = thanks van = than vem = them

In other versions of English around the world, people also substitute different sounds for /θ/ and /ð/, for example, some Irish speakers of English may use /t/ instead of /θ/ , and /d/ instead of /ð/, like this:

tink = think tanks = thanks
dan = than dem = them

Learners of English as a second language may automatically use substitute sounds to make these very common phonemes if /θ/ and /ð/ are not native to their first language. They may use one of the sound combinations above, or another set of substitute sounds: /s/ instead of /θ/ , and /z/ instead of /ð/, like this:

sink = think sanks = thanks zan = than zem = them

We already know that /s/ and /z/ are among the easiest sounds to pronounce in English (see p.3.9). The other substitute sounds above – /f/ and /v/, and /t/ and /d/ – are also much easier to pronounce than /θ/ and /ð/, which is why they are used.

What do you do to solve the problem of “th”?

Vowel sounds are made when air passes freely from your lungs through your mouth and out into the air. Consonant sounds are made when you restrict the flow of air through your mouth by using your tongue (often against your teeth), and altering the position of your mouth and lips.

The different combinations of vowel and consonant sounds when put together produce words that have fixed meanings that are shared by a group of people, e.g. all the speakers of any particular language. Some consonant sounds are easier to make than others because the positions that our mouth and tongue have to form require less effort.

In the same way, some consonant sounds are more difficult to make than others because our mouth and tongue have to move more: they have to work harder. The two “th” sounds fall into this category. We have to move our tongue very quickly and put it out between our teeth, then put it back, just as quickly. We have to work! But if we use /f/, for example, instead of /θ/, e.g. “fanks” instead of “thanks”, our tongue can have a holiday, because our lips form the /f/ sound, and our tongue doesn’t need to move.

“th” can be even more difficult to pronounce as a final digraph in combination with other consonant sounds. Here elision often comes into play, as seen when using the Connected Speech Templates from Talk a Lot Book 3. Below are some examples of difficult words to pronounce (adjoining consonant sounds are boxed):

fith, sith, thousandth, heath, weath, length, width, depth, etc.

Or we can just cheat and say “fith” (fifth), or “helf” (health), etc.

3. So, how can I pronounce the “th” sounds in English?

In one sentence: put your tongue out between your teeth. It can be learned. It is a physical action, like throwing a ball into a hoop (basketball), or mastering control of a bike, or learning to click your fingers...

Don't block the flow of air through your teeth with your tongue. Allow some air to pass through above and below your tongue. Your teeth should be touching your tongue, but only very gently. Each time your tongue should be there for about one second, then return to its home position. (See image below.)

The author making a “th” sound. Note: his fingers are in his mouth only to show the position of his tongue. You don't have to put your fingers in your mouth to make these sounds!

To make the /θ/ sound, don't let your vocal cords vibrate. To make the /ð/ sound, do the same as for the /θ/ sound, but allow your vocal cords to vibrate.

Practise in front of a mirror. Open up your mouth, as I have done in the picture above, to see what's going on. Or video yourself with a camera or phone. Practise with a friend. Help each other. Check what position the other person's tongue, mouth, and lips are in when they are:

- a) making a “th” sound correctly
- b) not making a “th” sound correctly

Practise with some of these exercises:

a) Take a deep breath in, then a long slow breath out, making a “th” sound, either /θ/ or /ð/ Repeat several time, then start to shorten the length of each breath out. As you do this you will be able to practise positioning your tongue correctly in order to make the “th” sounds.

b) Try saying /θ/ then /t/ then /ð/ then /θ/ again, and then repeat it, for example:

/θ/	/t/	/ð/	/t/	/θ/	/t/	/ð/	/t/	/θ/
th	t	th	t	th	t	th	t	th... etc.

c) Read lists of “th” words out loud one after another (see the word lists on pp.18.72-18.74), for example:

/θ/ faith, thanks, wealth, three, both, thought, teeth, throughout

/ð/ this, that, then, there, though, this, those, these

Say each word quickly, then slowly. Try varying the speed.

d) ...or you could read groups of ordinal numbers out loud, for example:

fourth, fifth, sixth, thirty third, thirty seventh, thirty eighth... etc.

Again, vary the speed at which you read them.

e) Choose a word and read it out loud very slowly, sounding out each phoneme – each individual sound. Use the phonetic spelling of the word to help you, e.g. “think” = /θ ɪ ŋ k/, and “that” = /ð æ t/ ... and so on.

f) Practise reading out loud tongue twisters – either to practise a particular phoneme, e.g. /θ/

- Thrifty thirty-three year-old thrill seekers threatened pathetic lethargic therapists.
- Three thick thieves from Thetford threw a party on Thursday.
- Theo thanked Thora for enthusiastically thinking up a frothy mathematical method.

Or /ð/ ...

- Heather and Rutherford breathed blithely and clothed themselves with feather bathing suits.
- The rhythm within withered further, though Smithers’s other swarthy northern brother writhed without.
- The Carruthers brothers tithed either their farthings or their father’s clothes.
- Arthur Worthington’s mother and father loathed withholding smooth scythes and seethed with oaths together.

...or mixed sounds: /θ/ and /ð/ together, for example:

- This is the third thing that Keith thought was thankless.

How to Pronounce the “th” Sounds in English

- A thousand thirsty tourists threatened to take out their teeth.
- Theresa tried to help both uncouth youths through the thickly-strewn undergrowth.
- The three things that Theo thought, though thoroughly truthful, were totally thoughtless.

Don't worry about the exact meaning of every word in the tongue twisters, but simply practise making the sounds! You could make up your own tongue twisters using the words from different word groups on pp.18.72-18.74. You could use either just one sound on its own or both sounds together.

Final thought:

Practice makes perfect! The following paradox applies to learning the “th” sounds:

“Nobody is born able to make these sounds, but everybody is born able to make these sounds.”

Talk a Lot

Introduction

Hello again!

Welcome to the third Talk a Lot course book! This book contains more than three hundred hours' worth of learning materials which teachers can use to create fun and interesting spoken English lessons for their students.

After completing Books 1 and 2, I wrote the Talk a Lot Elementary Handbook, which contains all of the instructions and planning materials that you need to run a Talk a Lot course. Therefore you won't find any instructions in this book. Instead simply download the Talk a Lot Elementary Handbook for free here: <http://www.englishbanana.com/talkalot/>

During this process I was able to develop several new activities for Book 3, so while you can still find Talk a Lot standards (like Sentence Blocks and Discussion Questions), and favourites (such as Role Plays and Information Exchanges), this book also features new original activities for practising connected speech (Connected Sentence Cards and Connected Speech Templates), for text-based speaking and listening work (Multi-Purpose Texts), and for pair or group discussion (Agree or Disagree?). This book then offers a much broader range of opportunities for teaching spoken English than the first two course books, with activities that are designed to appeal to learners from many different backgrounds and with a variety of learning styles. The topics of the units in this book have been chosen to be motivating and interesting to teenage and adult learners at this level. Each unit provides at least thirty hours' worth of teaching materials. The units are: Learning English, Films, Hospital, Books, Airport, Money, Places in the UK, Politics, Internet, and Australia.

This book is called Talk a Lot Elementary Book 3, but the skill range is fairly wide, including students at all levels between Elementary (CEF Level A2) to Pre-Intermediate (CEF Level B1). This means that the course is suitable for students studying for the Cambridge KET or PET examinations. Of course, teachers know the level of their students and will use the materials in accordance with what the students are able to (and want to) do. The verb tenses that are covered should be studied by all students at these levels, and the vocabulary words should be generally useful to students from Elementary upwards. However, some of the units may pose more of a challenge to true Elementary learners, because the vocabulary may be less familiar, e.g. Places in the UK and Australia. Similarly, some of the activities are more suitable for students at Pre-Intermediate level than Elementary, such as the Multi-Purpose Texts and Role Plays (although the teacher could adapt the role play situations for lower level students by simplifying them).

As before, the aim of this book is to teach students to think in English and Talk a Lot!

The Talk a Lot course objectives are very simple:

- Every student talking in English
- Every student listening to and understanding English
- Every student thinking in English, and
- Every student taking part in class

Talk a Lot is structured so that every student can practise and improve English grammar, vocabulary, pronunciation, intonation, word and sentence stress, and interpersonal skills, by working in pairs, groups and one to one with the teacher.

Talk a Lot

Introduction

The main benefits of Talk a Lot are:

- Students have to think in English during lessons in a controlled and focused way
- Students learn how to memorise correct English structures naturally, without abstract and unrelated grammar lessons
- Students learn how to construct eight different common verb forms, using positive, negative, and question forms, as well as embedded grammar appropriate to their level. The verb forms studied are: Present Simple, Present Continuous, Past Simple, Past Continuous, Present Perfect, Modal Verbs, Future Forms, and First Conditional
- Students learn 400+ essential vocabulary words by heart
- Students enjoy following a simple and effective method that produces results quickly
- Teachers have a pool of interesting and stimulating materials to draw from, including innovative activities that students may never have never tried before

In addition to trialling the materials with my own classes over the past twelve months, it has been a pleasure to use the activities to teach online, with classes of up to fifty people from different continents all online at the same time! I've also been very encouraged in my work by emails and messages from teachers and students who are using the Talk a Lot materials in their classes. Many thanks to everybody for your feedback. To date, more than a quarter of a million copies of Talk a Lot books have been downloaded from the internet since May 2008, which means that potentially millions of students will have been given photocopied or printed Talk a Lot materials! As a teacher, I know that the lesson materials work very well in my classes. They help me to bring variety to my students and to plan lessons that aren't boring or too "bitty" (with lots of very short activities all jumbled together), but that let each learner explore the sounds of English and discover their English voice.

Don't forget that to really get the most out of this book you can join many other teachers around the world in using our Free Copying Licence (p.i) and Free Licence to Run Courses (p.iii). Please feel free to copy this book, print it, sell it – and keep all of the profit! This is our unique offer to you. By way of example, here are a few comments from an individual in Kenya who is making good use of our free licences:

"I am the founder and responsible for a non-profit college project in eight countries worldwide (Kenya, Congo, Haiti, Nepal, etc.), and we would like to use Talk a Lot materials at our schools, and also distribute them on disks to our students and to other similar projects. In many of the developing nations, there is a lack of textbooks and other media that are standard in European and North American ESL. That is due to lack of funds, as well as opportunities to purchase such items, even if there were sufficient funds. Thus, I believe your generous offer fills a big gap in these nations, and I am sure the demand for it would be high ... Thanks for your hard, honest, and good work! You truly help many people, and especially those in need! Please feel encouraged to keep up the good work!"

Please do let us know what you think of this new book and how the materials are received by your students. You can contact us via the feedback form on our website, or by emailing info@englishbanana.com. I'd love to hear your feedback and also any ideas that you might have for future Talk a Lot books.

With my sincere best wishes to you, whether you are teaching or learning English,

Matt Purland, Ostróda, Poland (12th March 2010)

Ali won't move up to level six, if he passes his speaking exam.

Sentence Block Extensions

For all of the sentence block starting sentences there are at least two different wh- question words that can be used to make sentence blocks. In one case up to four different sentence blocks can be made from the same starting sentence when using different wh- question words. There isn't room here to print in full all of the sentence block extensions from this unit. Hopefully, the answers given above will give you the teacher (or you the student) enough guidance to be able to make the sentence block extensions for this unit with confidence.

For example, let's look at the first starting sentence from this unit:

Ala is an English student at the smallest language school in Toruń.

On the handout the wh- question word that is given is "Where", but this starting sentence also works equally well with three other wh- question words: "What kind", "Who", and "Which":

Sentence Blocks

What kind of student is Ala at the smallest language school in Toruń?

Who is an English student at the smallest language school in Toruń?

At which language school in Toruń is Ala an English student?

The idea is easy. Change the wh- question word each time and you can make several completely different sentence blocks from the original starting sentence, simply by finding the relevant information for the answer in the starting sentence. As you can see, sometimes the same wh- question word can be used more than once to make different sentence blocks.

You could cut out and give the section below to students:

Make new sentence blocks from the starting sentences in this unit using different "wh-" question words:

	WHAT	WHERE	WHEN	WHO	WHY	WHICH	HOW
1.	what kind			who		which
2.	what (x2) what kind			who		which
3.	what (x2)		when	who
4.	what (x2)	where
5.	what (x2)					which
6.			when	who
7.	what (x2)			who		which

Sentence Blocks – Sentence Stress and Vowel Sounds

Each content word (shown in black) contains one syllable with a strong stress, which is underlined. Each stressed syllable has one vowel sound. The vowel sounds on stressed syllables are the most important sounds in the sentence. They make the "sound spine" of the sentence. To improve communication, try to get the sound spine right.

Discussion Questions

1. Why are you learning English?

Have you got any qualifications in English? Would you like to achieve a qualification? Which one(s)? Are you self-motivated, or do you have to study English?

2. When did you start learning English?

Who was your first teacher? What did you do in your first lesson? How did you feel about it?

3. Who is your favourite English teacher, past or present?

Why? How have they helped you? Describe a typical lesson.

4. Have you ever been to the UK?

Tell me about it. Do you think you need to spend time in the UK or an English-speaking country to learn English well? Why? / Why not?

5. What kind of learner are you? Are you a kinetic learner, who learns by physically doing something practical; a language-orientated learner, who thinks in words and enjoys reading and listening; a visual learner, who thinks in pictures, and learns best by visualising concepts; or a logical learner, who thinks in terms of patterns and sequences, and enjoys puzzles and maths?

6. Do you use English outside the classroom?

Do you...

a) speak in English with friends and relatives; b) watch English-language TV shows with subtitles; c) listen to music with English lyrics; d) use the internet in English, e.g. social-networking sites, Skype, etc.? If not, why not?

7. Tell me about the other students in your English class. Who is your best friend in the class? Describe them. Who don't you get on with? Why not?

8. What do you think about your level of English? Are you happy with it? What do you need to improve? Why? How will you achieve your goal?

Role Plays

1. “Give us a quick look at your exam!”

Place: A language school; during an important exam
Time: 1.30pm
Characters: You and another student, then the school principal Situation: You are in an English language exam. You haven't done any revision and it's a sure thing that you will fail, unless you can copy all of the answers from the bright kid sat next to you Scenes: i) The exam begins. You realise that you don't know any of the answers. You try to copy from the student next to you, who isn't happy about it. You get caught cheating by the teacher a few times ii) Half an hour later: the teacher has had enough and moves you to the front of the class. When the teacher has to leave the room for a moment you take the opportunity to sneak a look at the answer paper on their desk

iii) 4pm. You have to talk to the school principal about your behaviour during the exam. You will have to take the exam again, on your own. Try to create some original reasons for your misbehaviour

If there are three people in the group, the third character could be:

- a) The teacher during the exam
- b) The school principal
- c) One of your parents, who is called to the school

2. “Oh no! Look what's happened...!”

Place: A fast food restaurant, just before it closes for the night
Time: 10.55pm
Characters: You and another student
Situation: You have to finish a class project by tomorrow morning, with your mate, who is by now almost fast asleep after eating junk food continuously for four hours and doing absolutely no work on the project

Scenes: i) Try to get your mate to help you finish the class project ii) After you are kicked out of the fast food restaurant, you go to your mate's house to work, but there are so many distractions there... Eventually you both finish the project, and you sleep over at your mate's house
iii) 8am. Time to get going! You go and grab the project, but find that during the night your mate's dog/cat/sister/elephant has completely destroyed it...!

If there are three people in the group, the third character could be:

- a) The bad-tempered and sleep-deprived manager of the fast food restaurant
- b) Your mate's dog/cat/sister/elephant, etc.!

Role Plays

Role Play Extensions

Here are some additional situations for students to use as starting points for new role plays based on the topic of "Learning English":

-----✂-----

Learning English

1. At a private language school: the school secretary finds out that you haven't paid your school fees for the past two months. Instead you have spent the money on living the life of an international movie star/super spy. Things take a turn for the worse after the school principal finds out, as well as your parents, and your friends all desert you because you're no longer throwing your money around...

2. It's your first day at work as an English language teacher. You are nervous because you have faked your certificates and CV, and have, in fact, never taught an English lesson before in your life. What will you teach? And how will your class – and school – react when they find out the truth? If they find out...

Sentence Block Extensions

For all of the sentence block starting sentences there are at least two different wh- question words that can be used to make sentence blocks. In one case eight different sentence blocks can be made from the same starting sentence when using different wh- question words. There isn't room here to print in full all of the sentence block extensions from this unit. Hopefully, the answers given above will give you the teacher (or you the student) enough guidance to be able to make the sentence block extensions for this unit with confidence.

For example, let's look at the third starting sentence from this unit:

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

Talk a Lot

Films

Sentence Blocks

Joe's friends saw a couple of award-winning films at the Odeon last weekend.

On the handout the wh- question phrase that is given is "How many", but this starting sentence also works equally well with six other wh- question words: "What", "Where", "When", "Who", "Whose", and "Which":

What did Joe's friends see at the Odeon last weekend? / A couple of award-winning films.

What did Joe's friends do last weekend? / They saw a couple of award-winning films at the Odeon.

Where did Joe's friends see a couple of award-winning films last weekend? / At the Odeon.

When did Joe's friends see a couple of award-winning films at the Odeon? / Last weekend.

Who saw a couple of award-winning films at the Odeon last weekend? / Joe's friends did.

Whose friends saw a couple of award-winning films at the Odeon last weekend? / Joe's friends did.

Which films did Joe's friends see at the Odeon last weekend? / A couple of award-winning films.

The idea is easy. Change the wh- question word each time and you can make several completely different sentence blocks from the original starting sentence, simply by finding the relevant information for the answer in the starting sentence. As you can see, sometimes the same wh- question word can be used more than once to make different sentence blocks.

You could cut out and give the section below to students:

Films

Make new sentence blocks from the starting sentences in this unit using different "wh-" question words:

	WHAT	WHERE	WHEN	WHO	WHY	WHICH	HOW
1.	what			who	why	which
2.	what (x2)			who	why	which
3.	what (x2)	where	when	who whose		which
4.	what	where		who (x2)
5.	what (x2)	where	when				how many
6.	what (x2)					which (x2)
7.	what (x2) what kind (x2)		when	who whose

Sentence Blocks – Sentence Stress and Vowel Sounds

Each content word (shown in black) contains one syllable with a strong stress, which is underlined. Each stressed syllable has one vowel sound. The vowel sounds on stressed syllables are the most important sounds in the sentence. They make the “sound spine” of the sentence. To improve communication, try to get the sound spine right.

Role Plays

1. “Cut!”

- Place: A beautiful stately home in the country, which is the set of a high-budget film – a costume drama set in the 1860s
- Time: 11.40am
- Characters: You are a film extra; the other student is a famous actor
- Situation: The famous actor is filming some emotional scenes. You are supposed to be in the background, keeping quiet and unnoticed
- Scenes:
- Shooting a scene: the actor’s character’s lover has left them for another man/woman. There is a dramatic argument. Suddenly your mobile rings. You answer it. The actor has to restart the scene. This happens a few times
 - Later, during a different scene, the actor’s character is plotting revenge on their former lover. You are supposed to be in the background, up a ladder, cleaning a window. You lose your balance and fall off. This happens a few times; the final time you actually fall through the window. The actor is cross
 - At the end of the day, you go to the actor’s dressing room and apologise. Try to get their autograph for yourself, and then for your mum, dad, sister, brother, cousin, Auntie Dotty, etc.!

If there are three people in the group, the third character could be:

- The upper-class director of the film, called Nigel*
- Another film extra, who is jealous of your screen time with the actor...*

2. “Your world is confusing to me!”

- Place: A DVD rental store
- Time: 3.30pm
- Characters: You work in the store; the other person is an alien from the planet Sproot
- Situation: The alien comes into the store to complain about his rental. It wouldn’t play...
- Scenes:
- You check the DVD on your player. It works fine. The alien explains that it wouldn’t fit in the slot. He (or she, or it) had been trying to put it into a video recorder. He chooses a different DVD
 - The next day, the alien returns to complain that the DVD is damaged. It wouldn’t play. This time it went in the slot OK, but all the power in his flat went off. He had been trying to put it into a toaster. He rents a different DVD
 - The next day, the alien comes back with the DVD and a microwave oven. Both are badly damaged. He is banned from the DVD rental store for life

If there are three people in the group, the third character could be:

- The alien’s equally confused friend / commander / overlord*
- The store manager, who is drunk*

Role Play Extensions

Here are some additional situations for students to use as starting points for new role plays based on the topic of "Films":

----- ✂ -----

Films

1. You are a comedy screenwriter. You have to finish your screenplay by 4pm today or you will lose the contract and have to pay back your initial fee (which you have already spent on luxury groceries). You are halfway through writing the screenplay. You have to buckle down and get some work done, but you face many distractions – in the form of your wife/husband, kids, former wife/husband, pets, cold-callers, and your agent, etc. – and temptations – in the form of eating, sleeping, watching daytime TV, sunbathing, surfing the internet, and eating (again)... Will you get your screenplay finished in time?

2. You are in court on trial, accused of illegally downloading films from the internet. Your defence lawyer is nervous because it's their first day in the job. It looks like you're guilty because you did download over two hundred films illegally from the internet, but only so that you could burn discs for your friends and family – and sell them at a car boot sale for 50p each! What will your defence be? Will you be convicted of the crime? What punishment awaits you...?

You won't get an infection tomorrow, if you have the blood test now.

Sentence Block Extensions

For all of the sentence block starting sentences there are at least two different wh- question words that can be used to make sentence blocks. In one case seven different sentence blocks can be made from the same starting sentence when using different wh- question words. There isn't room here to print in full all of the sentence block extensions from this unit. Hopefully, the answers given above will give you the teacher (or you the student) enough guidance to be able to make the sentence block extensions for this unit with confidence.

For example, let's look at the first starting sentence from this unit:

My granddad is in the Royal Hospital for a hip operation.

On the handout the wh- question word that is given is "Why", but this starting sentence also works equally well with six other wh- question words and phrases: "What", "What kind", "Where", "Who", "Whose", and "Which":

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

Talk a Lot

Hospital

Sentence Blocks

What is your granddad in the Royal Hospital for? / A hip operation.

What kind of operation is your granddad in the Royal Hospital for? / A hip operation.

Where is your granddad? / In the Royal Hospital for a hip operation.

Who is in the Royal Hospital for a hip operation? / My granddad is.

Whose granddad is in the Royal Hospital for a hip operation? / My granddad is.

Which hospital is your granddad in for a hip operation? / The Royal Hospital.

The idea is easy. Change the wh- question word each time and you can make several completely different sentence blocks from the original starting sentence, simply by finding the relevant information for the answer in the starting sentence. As you can see below, sometimes the same wh- question word can be used more than once to make different sentence blocks.

You could cut out and give the section below to students:

Hospital

Make new sentence blocks from the starting sentences in this unit using different “wh-” question words:

	WHAT	WHERE	WHEN	WHO	WHY	WHICH	HOW
1.	what what kind	where		who whose		which
2.	what	where		who (2 nd) whose		which
3.	what	where	when	who (x2)		which
4.	what			who (x2)	why
5.	what (x2)						how long
6.	what (2 nd)			who		which
7.	what (x2)	where					how soon
8.	what (2 nd)		when				how soon

Sentence Blocks – Sentence Stress and Vowel Sounds

Each content word (shown in black) contains one syllable with a strong stress, which is underlined. Each stressed syllable has one vowel sound. The vowel sounds on stressed syllables are the most important sounds in the sentence. They make the "sound spine" of the sentence. To improve communication, try to get the sound spine right.

8. Many English words contain one or more silent letters – letters which are part of the spelling of a word, but which are not pronounced. The aim of this activity is to demonstrate how so often the spelling of a word in English is different from how it sounds when spoken. Below are some good examples of words in this group of discussion words that have silent letters. The silent letters are shown in brackets. No doubt your students will be able to identify some more.

w [h] eelchair, nu [r] se, an [a] esthetic, h [e] art attack, [p] sychiatrist, porte [r], midwif [e], corrido [r]

"Which hospital would you give £5m extra funding to, and which one would you close? Why?" Answers will vary. For this activity students could imagine that they held a cabinet position in government, and had to decide the fates of two of these hospitals. Ensure that they produce good reasons for their choices – why they would give funding to one particular hospital, but not the others, and why they would close one particular hospital, but not the others. For example: "I would give £5m extra funding to King's Royal Infirmary, because I want them to continue their important work teaching medical students." And... "I would close St. Cuthbert's Green, because you have to wait a long time to have an operation, and the ambulance response time is too long." Or... "Because it has the fewest staff..." Or... "I wouldn't close King's Royal Infirmary because it's a fairly new hospital." [etc.]

Plaster Cast (Original Text)

Line

1 Two weeks later Dennis broke his ankle playing football with some friends from work.
2 He was rushed to hospital, moaning and groaning – not in an ambulance, but in his
3 dad’s work van. His friends and colleagues gathered in the hospital waiting room
4 while Dennis had an x-ray and was examined by the doctor. Several long hours later
5 Maggie was talking to her grandma on the phone, “Don’t worry, grandma. It looks like 6 it’ll be alright. He says he’s in agony, but the doctor said it wasn’t too serious.
7 Apparently, when he broke it the bones all stayed in the right place; and the ligaments 8 aren’t damaged.”
9 Dennis was sitting up in bed reading his first get well card, which had been 10 hand-delivered by his girlfriend Sarah. “I won’t be playing football for a while, lads,”
11 said Dennis to his mates. “They’ll let the swelling go down; then they’ll have to put it
12 in a plaster cast. And they’re saying I’ll need crutches.” “For six to eight weeks”, said 13 his dad, finishing a bunch of grapes, “Put your feet up for a bit.” “After that you’ll start 14 the physiotherapy,” added his mum.
15 “Can I sign your plaster, Dennis,” asked Sarah shyly. Dennis was about to 16 say yes, but then he noticed the frowning face of his sister out of the corner of his 17 eye. He remembered Mandy, the other girl he liked, and mumbled, “Er, no. I don’t 18 think so.” Then, seeing her disappointment, he said, “Well, OK. Just your initials.”

Hospital

Role Plays

1. “You won’t feel a thing!”

Place: A busy hospital on the edge of a large city
Time: 10.20 am
Characters: You are a patient; the other student is a nurse
Situation: You’re staying in hospital for a few days. Your doctor has sent you to the blood clinic to have a routine blood test. You are terrified of needles and can’t stand the idea of anyone sticking a syringe in your arm. However, your treatment cannot continue without the results of the blood test...

Scenes: i) You go to the blood clinic; you’re very nervous, but try to remain calm. When the nurse produces the syringe you run screaming from the room
ii) A few minutes later, you return to the clinic. You try to compose yourself. The nurse says that it will only take a second, and won’t hurt. You try to think about something pleasant, but at the last minute you see the syringe coming towards you and flee the room, gibbering as if you’ve seen a ghost
iii) Evening of the same day. The doctor needs the blood test results. You must have the blood test, no matter what. The nurse must convince, cajole, entice, or otherwise persuade you to have the blood test

If there are three people in the group, the third character could be:

- a) The doctor – who has an important appointment with some golfing chums
- b) Another patient, who seems to love having blood tests

2. “We need a place to smoke!”

Place: The grounds and car park area of a large hospital in the UK
Time: 11.35 am
Characters: You are a very conscientious security guard; the other student is a patient
Situation: Whilst patrolling the grounds you find somebody smoking behind a bike shed. The hospital has a “zero tolerance” policy on smoking, which means that smoking is not allowed anywhere on the hospital site – inside or outside Scenes: i) You confront the offender and remind them of the hospital’s policy. The patient makes up an excuse. Tell them that if you see them smoking again you will be forced to issue a fine of £100 ii) A few hours later, you catch the patient smoking again. This time you issue the fine. The patient tries to bribe you with some cheap cigarettes...

iii) In the final scene you and the patient are running an unofficial smoking area behind the bike shed, where other tense patients and relatives can smoke in safety without fear of prosecution – for £5 per cigarette!

If there are three people in the group, the third character could be:

- a) A nervous patient who can’t get through the day without twenty cigarettes
- b) Another security guard, who finds out what’s going on and threatens to report you

Role Plays

Role Play Extensions

Here are some additional situations for students to use as starting points for new role plays based on the topic of "Hospital":

----- ✂ -----

Hospital

1. It's your first day in hospital, and it looks like you could have to stay for a few weeks. You're lying in bed reading a magazine, when a nurse brings you a menu where you have to choose your evening meal option. The problem is that you're a fussy eater – and a borderline vegan, who likes fish, but is not allowed nuts, whole grain, or beetroot in any form (on the advice of your astrologist) – and you want to know in detail exactly what the ingredients of every meal are, and how they have been prepared – and even who has prepared them! It seems that whatever the nurse suggests, there's something about it that you can't tolerate. But you have to choose something. Or will you simply book an outside catering company to deliver your meals every day?

2. You are a bit of a hypochondriac – you always think there's something wrong with your health, when 99.9% of the time you're absolutely fine. As such, you are well known at your local hospital's A & E (Accident & Emergency) department. You often fake an attack of something nasty at A & E in order to get seen by a doctor or nurse, or anyone who will listen to you, more quickly – without waiting in line like everybody else. Today you are sure that you are at death's door – that your final hours have come – and you must be seen at once. How will you go about jumping the queue at A & E, when the average waiting time is around 4½ hours? To complicate matters further, there's a big football match on in the town this afternoon, so A & E is about to get even busier than usual...

I probably won't pass the chemistry exam, if I remember the plot and characters of War and Peace.

Sentence Block Extensions

For all of the sentence block starting sentences there are at least two different wh- question words that can be used to make sentence blocks. In one case seven different sentence blocks can be made from the same starting sentence when using different wh- question words. There isn't room here to print in full all of the sentence block extensions from this unit. Hopefully, the answers given above will give you the teacher (or you the student) enough guidance to be able to make the sentence block extensions for this unit with confidence.

For example, let's look at the seventh starting sentence from this unit:

Gerald Forster will sign five hundred copies of his latest thriller at Harold's Bookshop on Thursday 28th May.

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

Talk a Lot

Books

Sentence Blocks

On the handout the wh- question word that is given is "How many", but this starting sentence also works equally well with six other wh- question words and phrases: "What" (x2), "Where", "When", "Who", and "Which":

What will Gerald Forster sign at Harold's Bookshop on Thursday 28th May? / Five hundred copies of his latest thriller.

What will Gerald Forster do at Harold's Bookshop on Thursday 28th May? / Sign five hundred copies of his latest thriller.

Where will Gerald Forster sign five hundred copies of his latest thriller on Thursday 28th May? / At Harold's Bookshop.

When will Gerald Forster sign five hundred copies of his latest thriller at Harold's Bookshop? / On Thursday 28th May.

Who will sign five hundred copies of his latest thriller at Harold's Bookshop on Thursday 28th May? / Gerald Forster will.

Which thriller will Gerald Forster sign five hundred copies of at Harold's Bookshop on Thursday 28th May? / His latest thriller.

The idea is easy. Change the wh- question word each time and you can make several completely different sentence blocks from the original starting sentence, simply by finding the relevant information for the answer in the starting sentence. As you can see below, sometimes the same wh- question word can be used more than once to make different sentence blocks.

You could cut out and give the section below to students:

Sentence Blocks – Sentence Stress and Vowel Sounds

Each content word (shown in black) contains one syllable with a strong stress, which is underlined. Each stressed syllable has one vowel sound. The vowel sounds on stressed syllables are the most important sounds in the sentence. They make the “sound spine” of the sentence. To improve communication, try to get the sound spine right.

"Which book would you buy for your partner, and which for your grandma? Why?" Answers will vary. When they have completed filling the gaps, students should discuss which books they think their relatives would enjoy. They should produce appropriate reasons for their choices – why they would choose one book in particular for somebody, but not another. For example: "I would buy To Kill a Mockingbird for my partner, because he has always wanted to read it..." Or... "I wouldn't buy The Man Who Cycled the World for my grandma, because she isn't very interested in travel..." [etc.]

Christmas Presents (Original Text)

Line

1 It was nearly 8pm on a late night shopping night, two weeks before Christmas.
2 Maggie was in Harold's Bookshop in Derby with her little cousin Darren. "What about 3 this for Auntie Kathleen?" He produced a copy of 'Dolphins of the World'. "No, I've 4 got just the thing for mum," said Maggie, "She loves languages." And she popped a
5 copy of 'Go Italia!' into her basket. "What about for my dad?" asked Maggie. Darren
6 held up a copy of 'Flipper: The Authorised Biography'. "I'm not buying that!" squealed
7 Maggie. "Try and help me, Dazza! Ah, dad'll like this – 'Steam Engines of the 1840s'."
8 "Boring," said Darren, opening a pop-up book about killer whales. Maggie paid for the 9 books and they went outside into the cold.
10 "We've forgotten Dennis!" cried Darren. "He wants a car manual," replied
11 Maggie, "About BMWs. They didn't have it in the last shop." "What about here", said 12 Darren, pointing at World of Books, which was next to the market. They hurried in, 13 but they couldn't find it. Books For U didn't have it either. Just when they were about 14 to give up, they found Dennis's present in a tiny independent bookshop near the 15 station, called The Bookworm. They felt so pleased. On the bus home, as the snow 16 danced around outside, Darren was puzzled. "Why did you buy books for 17 everybody?" "Because you should always give the kind of present that you'd like to 18 receive yourself," replied Maggie. Darren thought for a moment. "So which book do 19 you want them to get you?" "I'll have a book token," declared Maggie decisively, "So 20 that I can choose my own present!"

Discussion Questions

1. What is your favourite book? Why? What is it about? When did you read it? Why were you first attracted to it? Have you read any other books by the same author? What is the worst book that you've ever read? Why? Did you finish it?

2. Who is your favourite author? Why do you like them? What kind of books do they write? Tell me about some of them. Describe how you imagine they would spend a typical day.

3. How important is reading? Should children read more often, e.g. at home as well as at school? How can we encourage children to read more? What benefits does reading give an individual?

4. Do libraries do a good job? What services do they offer? What new services should they provide? When did you last visit a library? Why did you go? Have you ever been told to be quiet in a library? Tell me some of the things that people shouldn't do in a library. Have you ever done any of them?

5. Do you have a book in you? If you could write a book, what kind of book (genre) would it be? Why? What audience would it be aimed at? Tell me an outline of the story, or subject matter. What would you include in the book? Would it have any illustrations? If yes, what?

6. Tell me about your favourite bookstore. Where is it? Why do you like it? Should bookstores be friendly places with comfortable armchairs and coffee shops? Why? / Why not? Are books too expensive?

7. Are video games just as good for children as books? Why? / Why not?

8. Could you live in a world without books? Why? / Why not? Will books eventually be replaced by electronic digital devices?

Role Plays

1. “I’m your biggest fan!”

Place: The ground floor of a large bookstore in the centre of town
Time: 4.05 pm
Characters: A famous author and his / her biggest fan
Situation: Your favourite author is in town doing a book signing. You love their books and have been queueing outside the bookstore for four days to be the first person to meet the author. Finally, the famous author arrives...

Scenes: i) Tell them what it means to you to meet them after so many years. Ask them to sign your book, with the following dedication: “To Auntie Rosemary – all the best, from...” You leave ecstatic that you have met your idol ii) After a few minutes, you go back to complain that the author has spelt “Rosemary” wrong. Also the dedication is not clear: “all the best” looks more like “all the rest”. You want the author to give you a new copy of their book, because yours is “ruined”. The author obliges reluctantly iii) A few hours later, you return to find that the queue has gone and the author is alone. You watch in surprise as the author walks around the store laughing, defacing books written by rival authors. What do you do?

If there are three people in the group, the third character could be:

- a) Your Auntie Rosemary, who is also a big fan of the author
- b) The author’s PA (Personal Assistant), who hates talking to fans

2. “Fishing in Hungary”

Place: A public library in a small town
Time: 8.50 pm
Characters: You are a student, and the other person is a librarian
Situation: You need to take out some books for your project. You must have them now. The library closes soon and the librarian wants to get home, after a fourteen-hour shift. Earlier today the librarian was told off for being rude to customers Scenes: i) You want to borrow “Fishing in Hungary”, by either Emil Stanovic, Imel Stonavic, or Amel Stinivac – you can’t remember the name of the author. The librarian checks on the computer and goes to get the right book ii) Next, you need “The Colour Blue”, by either Clair LeClerc, or Clark LeClerc – again you can’t remember the name. The librarian tries to be patient iii) Finally, you need “Filipe’s World of Flying”, by either Filipe Gonzales Hernandez, Hernando Gonzales Filipe, or Gonzalo Hernando Filipez – you’re not sure which is right. At this, the librarian may start to lose their patience...

If there are three people in the group, the third character could be:

- a) The librarian’s manager, who listens to check that they are being polite
- b) Another customer, who is even more demanding

Role Plays

Role Play Extensions

Here are some additional situations for students to use as starting points for new role plays based on the topic of "Books":

----- ✂ -----

Books

1. You are jealous of your talented friend, who is always doing impressive things, and winning praise from people. They have recently written a play, and they email it to you, asking you to spell-check it for them, and tell them what you think of it. You print out the play and read it quickly. When you realise that it is very good, you secretly send it to several important literary agents – telling them that you wrote it. After a few months the play is accepted by an agent, and you quickly discover that a famous theatre producer is planning to put it on in London's West End. You will get paid a lot of money! You feel pleased, but also a little guilty. There will be a lot of publicity for the play, because some big-name actors have signed up to play the lead roles, and your friend is bound to find out that it's their play. What do you do? Do you tell your friend what has happened – and try to patch up your friendship – or do you keep the money and attempt to keep your friend away from all of the publicity?

2. You are a minor character in a long, action-packed novel, that is currently being written by a mediocre, but successful, novelist. One day you find a way to burst out of the novel and you meet the novelist. First you have to prove to the novelist that you are real, and not a figment of their imagination. Next, you demand more dialogue in the novel, and a bigger role. The novelist doesn't want to change their story outline, but you threaten to run away and not return to the novel, so they agree to give you more to do. You go back to the novel reluctantly, but quickly reappear to make a suggestion that the novelist involves you in a stormy romance with the novel's leading lady. Again, the novelist doesn't want to alter their plot, but your whining wins the day, and you get what you want. However, after you've returned to the novel, it becomes clear that the novelist is deliberately changing the plot to make sure that you're killed in a steamroller accident – perhaps because you have been so demanding. For a third time, you burst out of the novel and, finding the novelist fast asleep at their desk, you rewrite the ending of the novel so that you and the heroine can live happily ever after!

Sentence Block Extensions

For all of the sentence block starting sentences there are at least two different wh- question words that can be used to make sentence blocks. In one case eight different sentence blocks can be made from the same starting sentence when using different wh- question words. There isn't room here to print in full all of the sentence block extensions from this unit. Hopefully, the answers given above will give you the teacher (or you the student) enough guidance to be able to make the sentence block extensions for this unit with confidence.

For example, let's look at the third starting sentence from this unit:

Last year I bought some duty-free sunglasses from a little shop at the airport in Minsk.

For more fun worksheets, games and quizzes log onto www.englishbanana.com now!

Talk a Lot

Airport

Sentence Blocks

On the handout the wh- question word that is given is "What", but this starting sentence also works equally well with seven other wh- question words and phrases: "What", "What kind" (x2), "Where", "When", "Who", and "Which":

What did you do in a little shop at the airport in Minsk last year? / I bought some duty-free sunglasses.

What kind of sunglasses did you buy from a little shop at the airport in Minsk last year? / Some duty-free sunglasses.

What kind of shop at the airport in Minsk did you buy some duty-free sunglasses from last year? / A little shop.

Where did you buy some duty-free sunglasses last year? / From a little shop at the airport in Minsk.

When did you buy some duty-free sunglasses from a little shop at the airport in Minsk? / Last year.

Who bought some duty-free sunglasses from a little shop at the airport in Minsk? / I did.

Which shop did you buy some duty-free sunglasses from last year? / A little shop at the airport in Minsk.

The idea is easy. Change the wh- question word each time and you can make several completely different sentence blocks from the original starting sentence, simply by finding the relevant information for the answer in the starting sentence. As you can see below, sometimes the same wh- question word can be used more than once to make different sentence blocks.

You could cut out and give the section below to students:

Sentence Blocks – Sentence Stress and Vowel Sounds

Each content word (shown in black) contains one syllable with a strong stress, which is underlined. Each stressed syllable has one vowel sound. The vowel sounds on stressed syllables are the most important sounds in the sentence. They make the "sound spine" of the sentence. To improve communication, try to get the sound spine right.

Airport – Who would you look for first?

Task: "Four passengers have been reported lost at a large airport near London, where you work as a customer service assistant. The time is 6.49 pm. Ask and answer questions to complete the gaps, and find out information about each person. Who would you look for first? Why?"

	Passenger #1	Passenger #2

Wearing	floral print dress, white sandals	new charcoal grey suit, red tie, buttonhole
Nationality / More information	Chilean / registered epileptic	Welsh / bald, red cheeks, has pacemaker
Reason for travelling	business trip	honeymoon

"Who would you look for first? Why?" Answers will vary. When they have completed filling the gaps, students should discuss which passenger they would look for first. They should produce appropriate reasons for their choices – why they would choose one person rather than another. For example: "I would look for Rosie Cooper first, because she's only fourteen and hasn't flown before..." Or... "I would look for Mr. P. MacNaulty first, because the check-in for his flight closes the soonest..." [etc.]

Sample Questions

What is the name of Passenger # _____?
How old is Passenger # _____?
Where is Passenger # _____ flying to?
What is Passenger # _____'s destination?
What time does check-in close for Passenger # _____'s flight?
What is the flight number of Passenger # _____'s flight?
Which airline is Passenger # _____ flying with?
What time does Passenger # _____'s flight depart?
Which gate does Passenger # _____'s flight depart from?
Who is Passenger # _____ travelling with?
When was Passenger # _____ last seen?
What is Passenger # _____ wearing?
What is Passenger # _____'s nationality?
Please tell me more information about Passenger # _____.
Why is Passenger # _____ travelling?

Sample Answers

His / her name is _____.
He / she is _____ years old.
He / she is flying to _____.
His / her destination is _____.
It closes at _____.
It's _____.

It departs at _____.
It departs from gate number _____.
He / she's travelling with _____.
At _____.
He / she is wearing _____.
He / she's _____.

He / she is travelling for _____.

Note: students should convert the times from the 24-hour clock, which we don't use in spoken English, to the 12-hour clock, which we do use. For example: "seven fifty five pm" or "five to eight", rather than "nineteen fifty five".

Examples

What time does Passenger #1's flight depart?	It departs at five to eight [or seven fifty five].
Which airline is Passenger #2 flying with?	Scot Air.
Who is Passenger #3 travelling with?	She's travelling with a colleague.
Why is Passenger #4 travelling?	He is travelling for his honeymoon.

[etc.]

Extension 1: you could try to encourage some comparative/superlative questions and sentences too, for example:

Who is the oldest passenger?	Lord Morgan is...
Whose flight departs the soonest?	Mr. P. MacNaulty's flight...
Which passenger is travelling the furthest?	Claudia Estobar is...

[etc.]

Extension 2: you could get students to develop short role plays where the worried parent, brother, colleague, or bride of each missing passenger comes to your customer service desk, and asks for help in finding their missing person. The role play could also work the other way around, with the missing person coming to your desk to report themselves missing. Students working in pairs could ask for and receive all of the information on the information exchange page and put it in the form of a dialogue – and then decide how each situation works out. Is Mr. P. MacNaulty reunited with his brother? Why has Lord Morgan disappeared? Does Rosie Cooper meet up with her parents before the flight departs? Will Claudia Estobar catch her flight on time?

Airport

Role Plays

1. “He’s completely harmless!”

- Place: A customs area at a major international airport
Time: 8.45 pm
Characters: You and a customs officer
Situation: You are an explorer, just returned from a trip to the rainforests of South America. You are trying to smuggle a ten-foot-long poisonous snake into the country, by wrapping it around your neck and pretending it’s an exotic scarf
- Scenes:
- i) The eagle-eyed customs officer spots the snake and asks you to explain what you’re doing trying to bring it into the country illegally
 - ii) The snake gets loose and attacks the customs officer, giving them a nasty bite. The customs officer believes that they’re going to die and starts to make a will, but you explain that the snake has had all of its poison removed
 - iii) In the confusion the snake escapes and slithers away into the airport, causing pandemonium. You and the customs official try to catch it, whilst at the same time reassuring members of the public that it’s harmless...

If there are three people in the group, the third character could be:

- a) Another customs official, who has a more relaxed attitude to their job
- b) A member of the public who panics and tries to kill the snake with their umbrella

2. “Do you really need to fly?”

- Place: On the pavement outside a large international airport
Time: 10.42 am
Characters: You are a climate change protestor, and the other person takes three different roles
Situation: You have been standing outside the airport in the rain on your own for two days, protesting about the damage that air travel is doing to the environment
- Scenes:
- i) You recognise a passenger entering the airport. It’s one of your neighbours. They explain why they need to travel – for business. You argue that they don’t need to fly and could use other means of transport
 - ii) A few hours later you meet a close friend coming out of the airport. They have just flown back 4,000 miles from a family reunion. Explain that they should have used video conferencing or Skype to get together instead
 - iii) The next day you get a phone call from an influential climate change campaigner – one of your heroes – thanking you for your efforts and inviting you to attend an international conference on global warming this weekend. Unfortunately, the only way to get there in time is by plane. What do you do?

If there are three people in the group, the third character could be:

- a) Another climate change campaigner, who is terrified of being arrested
- b) A security guard working at the airport who wants you to “Clear off!”

Role Plays

Role Play Extensions

Here are some additional situations for students to use as starting points for new role plays based on the topic of "Airport":

----- ✂ -----

Airport

1. You are in a taxi on the way to the airport. Your flight leaves in about an hour and you're worried that you're going to miss it. Your driver is less bothered and you start to panic when you realise that they've taken a wrong turn. The driver turns round and you find the right road. They begin telling you all about their life story, and how difficult things have been since their partner left them. Suddenly the taxi hits a bump in the road and all of your luggage falls out onto the road. Having collected your bags and repacked them, you become more and more anxious about missing your flight. The driver goes faster and faster but all of a sudden they are stopped by the police for speeding and given a fine. You finally get to the airport, but when you refuse to give the driver a tip they chase you through the terminal. Will you catch your flight?

2. You are in an airport late at night waiting for the check-in desk to open. You fall into a deep sleep and when you awake you can't remember anything at all about yourself, either who you are or what you're doing. You've got amnesia! You ask a member of the airport staff to help you recover your identity. You start to remember slowly, but you can't recall what you're doing in the airport or what you have to do in order to catch your flight. You find your plane tickets and passport in your bag, and the other person guides you through the process of catching your flight: check in yourself and your luggage; show your passport; go through the security check; go through the duty-free area; find the correct gate; get on the plane. As they help you, your memory starts to return and you're able to follow their advice...

Sentence Block Extensions

For all of the sentence block starting sentences there are at least two different wh- question words that can be used to make sentence blocks. In one case up to six different sentence blocks can be made from the same starting sentence when using different wh- question words. There isn't room here to print in full all of the sentence block extensions from this unit. Hopefully, the answers given above will give you the teacher (or you the student) enough guidance to be able to make the sentence block extensions for this unit with confidence.

Sentence Blocks

For example, let's look at the second starting sentence from this unit:

Roger is paying his gas bill and electricity bill at the post office.

On the handout the wh- question word that is given is "Where", but this starting sentence also works equally well with three other wh- question words: "What", "Who", and "How":

What is Roger doing? / Paying his gas bill and electricity bill at the post office.

What is Roger paying at the post office? / His gas bill and electricity bill.

What is Roger doing at the post office? / Paying his gas bill and electricity bill.

Who is paying his gas bill and electricity bill at the post office? / Roger is.

How is Roger paying his gas bill and electricity bill? / At the post office.

The idea is easy. Change the wh- question word each time and you can make several completely different sentence blocks from the original starting sentence, simply by finding the relevant information for the answer in the starting sentence. As you can see, sometimes the same wh- question word can be used more than once to make different sentence blocks.

You could cut out and give the section below to students:

Sentence Blocks – Sentence Stress and Vowel Sounds

Each content word (shown in black) contains one syllable with a strong stress, which is underlined. Each stressed syllable has one vowel sound. The vowel sounds on stressed syllables are the most important sounds in the sentence. They make the “sound spine” of the sentence. To improve communication, try to get the sound spine right.

Money – Who is the Richest?

Task: "Ask and answer questions to complete the gaps, and find out what each person did with their money last Monday. Who do you think is the richest? Why?"

	ERIC [male]	CARL [male]
PAY IN (bank)	£700	£25
GIVE (charity)	nothing	£5
WITHDRAW (cashpoint)	£300	nothing
ENQUIRE (post office)	passport	home contents insurance
LEND (amount / person)	nothing	£10 / cousin Rolf
BORROW (amount / person)	£50 / wife	nothing
CHANGE (currency)	£1400 into Euros	nothing
BUY (item / method)	x2 flights / credit card	bread, light bulb / cash

	WENDY [female]	KASIA [female]
PAY IN (bank)	nothing	£228.50
GIVE (charity)	£10 by direct debit	£3,500 by cheque
WITHDRAW (cashpoint)	£30	£10
ENQUIRE (post office)	personal loan	cheap calls abroad
LEND (amount / person)	nothing	£20 / neighbours Jan and Tim
BORROW (amount / person)	£250 / sister	nothing
CHANGE (currency)	$US80 into pounds sterling	€18,000 into pounds sterling
BUY (item / method)	leather sofa / interest free credit	cinema tickets / debit card

Kasia could be the richest, because she gave the largest amount to charity, and made the largest transaction – changing €18,000 into pounds sterling.

Money Worries (Original Text)

Line

1 In March Rob received a letter out of the blue from his employer, Mr. Pinkney of 2 Pinkney's and Sons Heavy Haulage Company. He couldn't believe what it said.
3 "It looks like I could be out of a job soon," he said to Kathleen, when he got 4 home from work after a twelve-hour shift.
5 "Why, what's happened?" asked his wife, looking up from her newspaper.
6 "Pinkney's going to make everyone redundant," said Rob gloomily, "He told 7 us today, and gave us this letter. It says the company's badly in debt and he needs to 8 get a big loan from the bank. His accountant's gone missing, too."
9 Later that evening Rob and Kathleen were washing up in silence. "We've 10 never had to worry about money in the past," said Kathleen suddenly, "We've always 11 had enough. You'll find another job." "But how will we pay the mortgage if I'm out of 12 work?" moaned Rob. "It's a nightmare."
13 Just then Maggie and Dennis came in. "Mum," said Maggie, "I need some 14 cash for tomorrow. It's the charity fun day at school."
15 "And I need the money I lent you at the weekend, dad. My mate's coming 16 round and I've got to pay him back the tenner I owe him." Kathleen looked at Rob and 17 smiled.
18 "We'll be alright," she said, kissing him on the ear. "I wish I could be so sure," 19 sighed Rob. (230 words)
